Nothing so wastes the vital nerve force as worry. Nothing so certainly reards restoration to health. Get out into the sunshine, be cheerful, use Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food to rebuild the wasted nervous system, and you will be surprised how quickly there will be a change for the better. This advice will be better than gold to you if you will but follow it.

MISTAKES IN THE POULTRY YARD

From Farm and Dairy.

J.V.Jackson, Westmoreland Co.,N.B.

Mistakes are being made daily in the poultry yard. I will point out a few which come under my notice most frequently and suggest ways to avoid these mistakes.

One of the most common mistakes is to over-crowd. A person goes to a poultry show, visits some enthusiastic poultry man who is making money or gets the idea somewhere that there is all kinds of money in poultry for anybody and everybody. Forthwith he gets the hen fever and the only cure is to get into poultry. Probably he only has house accommodation for a dozen hens, but wishing to get rich quick, he buys 25 or 30. If you have room for a dozen hens, get a dozen and no more. More eggs can be obtained from 12 hens in a place 10 x 12 feet than from 20 hens in the same space.

THE QUESTION OF STOCK

Mistake No. 2: Having decided to keep hens, the new poultry man begins to look around for stock. Having an eye for beauty, he goes to a breeder of pure bred stock, and is quoted prices running from $1 to $5 each for A.1 birds. The price frightens him. He finds an excuse to leave saying he will call again. He calls on a fellow who is sick of the business and has a lot of cheap hens for sale at a low price. He can get these for 35 or 40 cents each. He buys them. It is here that he makes his mistake. If you are going to keep hens at all, keep good ones. If you cannot afford to buy very many first-class birds, buy as many as you can, and wait either until you can buy or raise the number you require.

Mistake No. 3: Hens have to eat. A hen is simply a machine to convert fodders into eggs. Unless she gets enough raw material for egg production and at the same time enough to build up the tissues of the body, she is not going to do her best.

RESULTS SHOULD COUNT

One should never buy feed solely because it is cheap. In the long run the cheapest food is the one that gives the best results. Last January, a neighbor asked us what we were feeding our poultry and wanted to know the cost. We told him our mash cost us $2.10 to $2.25 a cwt. He thought that this was pretty high. He was feeding boiled potatoes thickened with corn meal and was getting an average of five eggs daily from 46 hens. From the same number of hens we were getting 24 eggs a day. With eggs at 35 cents a dozen, we were getting 60 cents a day more than he was from the same number of hens.

PRUNING CURRANT BUSHES

From Farm and Dairy.

Wm. Fleming, Grey Co., Ont.

The pruning of red, white and black currant bushes should be performed late in the fall or early in the spring, and the work should not be committed to an inexperienced hand, as the result would certainly be disastrous. The following method should be followed:

1. The operator should note the extent of space the bush can occupy, how close the limbs are to the ground, the crowded state of the limbs and the symmetrical condition.

2. If the bush can afford it, the limbs that lie too close to the ground should be removed, and the bush generally, if required to admit air and sunshine freely, should be trimmed.

3. About half the preceding year's growth (if the bush is in a healthy condition) should be cut back, but not in any case to injure the symmetrical condition.

4. The severity of the pruning should be controlled by the space the bush has to occupy.

5. The pruning should be performed annually.

GROWING CAULIFLOWERS

From Farm and Dairy.

A. Knight, Frontenac Co., Ont.

To be successful in growing cauliflower plants, there are three essential things to be followed: 1. Proper soil, which should be of the very best obtainable—a loose, mellow soil made rich with fine rotted manure, one that will remain loose and keep moist; it cannot be too fine, for the finer the more roctlets the plant will have, and the more soil will adhere to them when plants are taken up. 2. The seed, which should be the best to be had. 3. Care in growing the plants.

If plants are required for early crop, seed should be sown by first of March in a greenhouse or properly made hotbed. The seed bed should not be too warm but of proper warmth to keep plants growing healthy. Plant the seed about one-half an inch deep, and not too thick, as thick planting makes plants too fine, and they are more apt to damp off. The bed requires plenty of fresh air on warm days to make stocky plants.

As soon as the plants are large enough, that is, well out in second leaf, which should be in three weeks after sowing, transplant them into a new bed, which should be made a few days before needed.

If plants are wanted for extra early, it is better to pot them in fair sized pots, as by doing so you can plant in the field a larger plant, and not check growth. Great care must be taken to prevent any serious check; for plants are apt to have very small heads or "button up" as it is termed, if any serious check occurs in growth.

For late crop, seed is better sown in outdoor ground. Plant not too deep, in warmest and best soil you have. Thin out the plants while small to make good stocky plants. Watch for cabbage fly, and dust plants often.

FEEDING THE CHICKENS

From Farm and Dairy.

J. W. Clark, Brant Co., Ont.

Good growthy chickens ready for the market in late summer or early fall can be raised at a minimum cost when fed from hoppers and allowed to range in the orchard. My chickens have the run of my orchard, which is kept well cultivated so that there is lots of green food provided such as a chicken can eat. I sow a little clover for them. Since the orchard is cultivated, say once a week, the soil is in splendid shape for the chickens to dig and scratch and thus secure much animal food. The different young weeds and clover that keep popping up makes the ideal green food for them.

The chickens also do a world of good in the orchard. It is most interesting to watch them in the early morning out under the trees. Codling worms, canker worms, and so forth, which let themselves down to the ground by means of their silken ropes, are quickly snatched up and converted into chicken. The shade which the trees provide is a necessity of chick life in hot weather; hence it is an all round benefit to have them in the orchard.

My chicks are fed wheat screening and cracked corn, all they want, as they take it from the hoppers. They are watered from a barrel, the water from which drops slowly into a drinking pan beneath. A mash, feed of ground oats and corn mixed with sour skim-milk, is fed once a day. Sweet milk should never be given, as it propagates disease so readily. Buttermilk is even better than sour milk, and may be fed liberally to great advantage.

If farmers generally will feed their chicks in this way, they will raise the best chickens they ever did. Their chickens will be much better than they have been, and they will have such chickens as they will get off to market early—chickens that will not need crate fattening, and there will be but little labor in raising them.

CHEESE MAKING

From Farm and Dairy.

W. D. Clapper, Peterboro Co., Ont.

One point on which cheese makers are lamentably weak is that they have not the backbone to return to the farmers dirty or over ripe milk. One can of bad milk sent home is worth more than an hour's talk on the advantages of delivering good milk. If all makers would throw down dirty milk, there would be no trouble in getting patrons to take care of the product. Half of the farmers dump the milk into a can without straining and think that is all they have to do.

It is rather difficult, however, for one maker to reject milk when the maker at the next factory will take it in. Makers should stand together on this question and absolutely refuse to take milk rejected at another factory. Time and time again I have refused to take milk rejected at another factory, but at the same time the milk I rejected was readily disposed of at a neighboring factory.

UNDERSTAND EACH OTHER

Why cannot we cheese makers get together and have an understanding with each other, whereby we can refuse all milk and not be imposed upon by our employers for so doing. The time is here when the cheesemaker must put up a fancy article. We cannot do it if the patrons do not give us good milk and we should have authority to reject all milk that will not make first-class cheese.

I do not say that I would send back bad milk from a patron who usually sends good milk, without giving him an explanation. If the otherwise good patron did send in milk slightly sour, I would take it in, do the best I could with it, and visit that patron personally to see what was the matter. Such patrons will remedy defects when their attention is called to them. But to the careless patron I would send it back.

A QUESTION

From Farm and Dairy.

Please suggest the best method of making good use of a small field on top of a sandy hill. It is in pasture at present.

2. Will alfalfa grow where clover has been, without inoculation.—H.H.W., Richmond Co., Que.

1. On such a field as described good results might be confidently expected from the following line of treatment: Between now and May 15th apply 15 tons farmyard manure an acre. Plow three to four inches deep when the weather is wet and roll and disc harrow at once; not later than May 25th if possible. Work the soil till a good firm seed bed is secured. Then sow White Cap Yallow Dent or Learning corn in hills three and a half or four feet apart each way. Keep the corn field clean during summer. Let cattle in when the corn is harvested. Rip up corn stubble with a stiff tooth cultivator or disc harrow in the fall. Harrow well and sow next spring (1912) to oats, three bus. an acre and at same time sow 12 lbs. red clover, two lbs. alsike, three lbs. alfalfa and six lbs. timothy an acre. Mix the grass and clover seed thoroughly, divide into two equal portions, sow one half lengthwise, other half crosswise, covering the whole field at each seeding. Harrow lightly after seeding and roll firmly, going twice over the field with the roller if the land is at all loose.

Her Face and Body Were Litterly Covered With "BOILS."

Burdock Blood Bitters Cured Them.

Mrs. John H. King, Johnston, N.B. writes:—"Last summer I was very much troubled with boils, and my face and body were literally covered with them. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I got three bottles, and before I had taken all the first one my boils began to go away. I had just taken a few doses out of the last one when they all disappeared. My husband has also used Burdock Blood Bitters with much benefit."

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time, are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and to get rid of them it is necessary to put the blood in good condition, and for this purpose there is nothing to equal that old and tried remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters.

"I am constrained to believe that the growth of Claresholm during the next five years will be a repitition of Calgary's progress during the same period just past. Another city in Southern Alberta is looked for, and quite natural, too. Claresholm has by far the best chance of any on account of its geographical location. It may never be a large city, but to say as large as Lethbridge is to-day is well within keeping, and far from conjectural."

I would not at all be surprised to see Claresholm with 15,000 population within five years, as its greatest period of growth will be after it has passed the ten thousand mark. The degree of speculation upon this basis is very low and I think my prophesy will be realized within the limit of time I expressed."

LOST THRONES

The fate of King Manuel recalls that he is not only the only living ruler who has lost his throne, but he is not even the only living member of the House of Braganza who has suffered the misfortune of dethronement. In the Isle of Wight there dwells a man who was once Queen of Portugal. For six years her husband, King Miguel, strived hard to keep the Lusitanian crown from Donna Maria, the rightful possessor of it, but after a lot of bloodshed, he was sent to the right-about, and Donna Maria came by her own. She was the great grandmother of young King Manuel. Then there is the Duchess of Parma. She is a Braganza Princess who married another ill-fated European ruler. Her husband, who died two years ago, was the last sovereign ruler of an ancient royal house in Italy. What the last Duke of Parma and his wife lost in regal prestige, they made up in domestic felicity, for the Duchess presented the late Duke with no less than twelve children, all of whom survive, while the Duke's first wife had presented him with nine sons and daughters, eight of whom are still living. The Duchess of Parma is therefore the mother, or stepmother, of twenty-one children. Another Braganza Princess who has narrowly missed wearing a crown is the Comtesse D'Eu. Before her marriage to this Orleans Prince she was Her Royal Highness Princess Isabelle Christine Leopoldine, Augustine Michelle Gabrielle Raphaelle Gonzaga De Braganza, the second daughter of Pedro II., Emperor of Brazil. Had the Portuguese dynasty in Brazil not come to an end, the Comtesse D'Eu would have been an empress in her own right, as her two brothers both died in infancy. The House of Braganza has therefore suffered some terrible dynastic vicissitudes during the last half-century.

Among other living royalties who have worn crowns which are now in the possession of others are the ex-Empress Eugenie, the widow of Napoleon III., Emperor of the French Her Majesty is still wonderfully active. She was a great beauty, but her vanity is said to have been the cause of the Franco-Prussian War, in which thousands of lives were lost. The ex-Empress lost her only son, the Prince Imperial, in the Zulu War. One of the most pathetic figures among the dispossessed monarchs is Charlotte, ex Empress of Mexico. For many years she has been in a lunatic asylum. Her husband was the Archduke Maximilian of Austria, brother of the present Austrian Kaiser, and he responded to the invitation of the people of Mexico to become their ruler only to find himself drawn into a death-trap from which there was no dignified escape. He was eventually shot dead in Mexico, and his miserable widow, not long after lost her reason. She is the unhappy sister of the late King of the Belgians.

The Grand Duchess of Tuscany is the last lady who will bear that historic title. The last ruling Grand Duke of Tuscany, her husband, lost his kingdom by royal decree of March 22, 1860, when his dominions were added to the province conquered by the King of Sardinia, and henceforth became part of the "United Italy" of Victor Emmanuele and Garibaldi.

Another lady who has lost a crown is the ex-Queen Natalie of Servia. She was the wife of King Milan, and mother of that unfortunate young King Alexander, whose assassination with his wife, Queen Draga, put an end to the Obrenovitch dynasty of Servia and paved the way for King Peter's accession. Altogether, these dispossessed Queens are not to be envied.

Among the monarchs who have ceased to rule are the deposed Shah, Mohammed Ali Mirza the son of Muzaffin-ed-Din, who used to be so well-known in London. Another Mohammedan monarch who has been replaced is Abdul Hamid, who, as the "Sick Man," was the bugbear of European politics for forty years. He is now said to be a lunatic, and is, at any rate, a prisoner. He is never likely to be ruler of Turkey again. Theebaw, ex-King of Burmah, who was dethroned by the British Government after the last Burmese campaign, still lives and thoroughly enjoys his rustication at Ratnagiri, a town on the West Indian Coast. He also is nominally a prisoner, but feels none of the restrictions implied by that term, but he will never be allowed to see his beloved Burmah again.

India, by the way, has more than one Maharaja who has been deprived of his "Gadi." One of them is Mahdo Singh, the ex-Maharaja of Panna. He took a dislike to his nephew, who was heir-presumptive of the State, so Mahho Singh caused him to be poisoned. After a State inquiry, which lasted forty days, the British Government deposed the Maharaja, and hanged the man who perpetrated the foul deed.

A monarch who, in his day, has been much in the public eye, is the ex-Sultan of Morocco, who was defeated in war by Mulai Hafid, and removed from the Sultanate. The ex-ruler of Morocco was a go-ahead sort of chap, and filled large rooms in his palace with golden cameras, toy railways, cinematograph apparati, concertinas, pianos, and bicycles.

Prempeh, the ex-King of Ashantee, too, still lives, and is ready and willing on all occasions to talk of the "City of Blood" and the terrible human sacrifices which were his diversion in the days of his kingship. There are a few other dethroned rulers in various coast towns of the Dark Continent, but they are kept under strict supervision. The last monarch to be deposed before the fall of King Manuel was Yong-Hi, the Emperor of Korea, who years ago saw his mother butchered on her throne, and who will probably be a happier man as a pensioner of Japan than as an Asiatic sovereign. True it is that "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

DRINK PASSION AT ITS WORST

The Age at Which it is Most Likely to Overcome a Man or Woman, According to Statistics

At what age is the drink passion most likely to overcome a man or woman? At what age may the danger of such a fate be said to have passed? The answers are found in a bulky Blue-book dealing with London Police statistics issued recently. Between the ages of thirty and forty the largest number of habitual drunkards were received into inebriate reformatories, namely, ninety-six, and between forty and fifty the number fell to fifty-seven.

But it must be borne in mind that these figures deal with the age on reception, and, in view of the reluctance of magistrates to commit, and the fact that several convictions must take place before the magistrate has the power to commit, it is certain that each inmate must have been an habitual drunkard for many years before entering a home. It would seem, therefore, that very few persons fall a victim to the drink habit after the age of say, forty-five, and practically none after fifty. The ages at which the danger of falling a victim to the drink habit is at its greatest seem to lie between twenty-five and thirty-five.

Crime figures were high in 1909, and especially noticeable was the increase in burglary and house and shop-breaking. Thus in 1909 there were 11,075 such cases against 11,619 in 1908, 10,584 in 1907, and only 9,141 in 1906. It was estimated that there were only 4,064 habitual criminals at large in April, 1909, against 4,255 the previous year, and 4,197 in 1907, though, it is pointed out, 1909 was a year of many crimes. Debtors committed to prison numbered 19,155, while persons imprisoned in default of payment of fine numbered 92,699.

75 Years in One Firm

Two men with sixty-eight years' service each, two with sixty-two, one with sixty, and one with fifty-five are at present working in the factory of a well-known firm at Loughborough. John Kirby, who died in 1907, aged eighty-seven, had a record of seventy-seven and a half years' service with the firm.

ELEPHANT HUNTER'S INCOME

The first meeting of creditors under the failure of the Hon. Rupert Cecil Craven, a son of the third Earl of Craven, was held at the London Bankruptcy Court, when it was stated that the debtor's occupation had been mainly that of elephant hunting, which produced him an income of $2,500 a year.

The debtor owes about $5,000, and has no assets. He attributes his position to heavy expenses in connection with divorce proceedings in 1899 and to loss over South African shares in 1905

The case was left with the Official Receiver to be wound up in bankruptcy.

THAT DEPENDED

A very small boy was trying to lead a big St. Bernard dog up the road. "Where are you going to take the dog, my little man?" inquired a passer-by. "I—I'm going to see where—where he wants to go first," was the breathless reply.

SWORD SHEATHED FOR A CENTURY

What Some Canadians Say as to Proposed Centennial in Honor of Peace

The anniversary of a great national achievement, namely peace for a century between Canada and the United States, is proposed for this year. Here is what some Canadians say of it:

Hon. A. G. MacKay

"If two nations can, with ease and with advantage to both, live at peace for the one hundred years next succeeding the War of 1812, with all its somewhat exasperating recollections," said Hon. A. G. MacKay, Owen Sound, "how many century marks may they not pass with no other result than ever-increasing friendship and good-will? The celebration of a century's peace between these two great Anglo-Saxon nations means more in prospect than in retrospect. Who can estimate the momentum of the force that would make for the peace of the whole world if the British Empire and the United States of America, two of the greatest of national world-forces, were unambiguously to signify their joint and unalterable determination to accept, nay, to enforce, the message with which the Prince of Peace Himself has heralded: "On earth peace, good-will toward men." If two nations such as Canada and the United States, with practically an ungarrisoned and non-fortressed four thousand mile frontier, make the Century mark as brother nations should, such an event should be fittingly celebrated in order that, if possible, certain other nations may learn and realize the fact that public moneys might be better spent on that which would work for the longevity of the people rather than in costly preparations for their immediate destruction. The time seems fast approaching when, by the force of public opinion the world over, international differences must be submitted, not to the arbitrament of the sword, but to that of an unbiased judicial tribunal. When this is accepted as international law, then, and not till then, will the nations act as if they really believed and realized the undoubted fact that 'War is Hell.'"

HON. A. G. MACKAY

Hon. Richard McBride

"After living peacefully side by side for a century," said Hon. Mr. McBride, Premier of British Columbia, "it is inconceivable that any international question should arise between Canada and the United States that cannot be solved by peaceful means. Recalling the success that has attended the submission to arbitration of important questions affecting both nations, it does not appear with the range of possibility that war should ever again be waged between the Empire and our kindred nation the United States. Our countries stand as an example to the world of the highest type of civilization yet attained. Our ideals, our love of true freedom and desire for the advancement of mankind, are similar and our friendly relations so interwoven that wisdom, moderation, and a sense of our tremendous responsibilities can be relied upon to settle our difficulties by peaceful means. We Canadians have no warlike aspirations; we desire to live alongside the United States as good neighbors and friends, and the proposed celebration of one hundred years' peace between the two countries should be an object lesson and an example to the world at large."

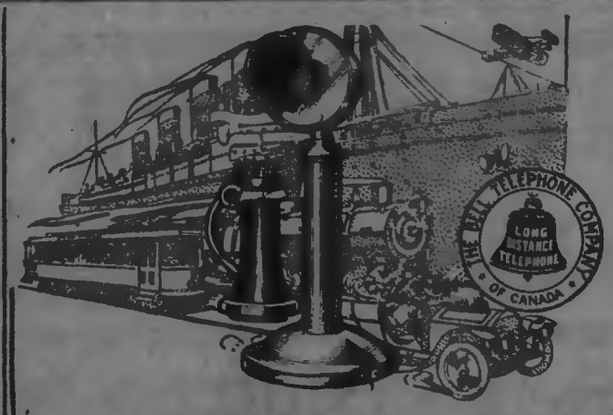
EATING THEIR NAMES

In order to facilitate the teaching of the alphabet a Servian school master has provided each of his young pupil with a chocolate set of letters. As soon as the child can put his name together correctly he is allowed to eat it. Word-making is carried on the same plan. Many of his pupils can read fluently in three days.



SOME MODERN TIME-SAVERS

Among modern agents for saving time and annihilating space, the telephone stands easily first.

When you instal a telephone, you want the service by which you can reach the greater number, not only in your own community, but in the surrounding country.

In Peterborough and the country round, the vast majority of telephone users have Bell service.

An Overwhelming Charge.

"You are charged," he remarked, reading the formal complaint, "with having willfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought appropriated to your own use and behoof a certain article—to wit, a one wheeled vehicle, commonly called a wheelbarrow—the said article having been wrongfully and feloniously abstracted by you from the premises of one John Smith, carpenter, on the 18th day of September, anno Domini, contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided and against the peace and dignity of this great realm. What have you to say? Are you guilty or not guilty?"

"Not guilty, guv'nor. All I done was to steal a barrow!"—Tit-Bits.

Her First Vote.

It was the evening of election day, and Higgleby had just returned home.

"Well, my dear Jane," said he as he kissed his wife, "did you vote today?"

"Yes," replied the lady.

"Straight ticket, I suppose?" smiled her husband.

"Well, no," said Mrs. Higgleby. "After thinking it all over and reading the platforms of both parties I felt that one was about as good as the other, so I split my ticket."

"Split it?" roared Higgleby. "Why, how did you do it?"

"Why, instead of putting an X over the name of one candidate," said Mrs. Higgleby, "I divided it in half and put a V over both."—Harper's Weekly.

An Observation.

"Ever notice it?" queried the man who asks questions on the installment plan.

"Did I ever notice what?" queried the innocent bystander.

"That the man who shakes hands the hardest is always the hardest to shake?" concluded the other.—Chicago News.

RAILROAD GARDENS

Flower Scheme of Canadian Pacific Complete Success

The inauguration of the flower scheme by the Canadian Pacific Railway sixteen years ago, has resulted in there now being over 1,500 gardens on the whole system. Railway-stations round-houses divisional offices, section houses, watchmen's gates, interlocking plants, area dorned with flowers, which the men take care of in their spare time. These employes are naturally amateurs, but their taste and example have spread to the communities across the continent, with astonishingly beneficent results. Enthusiasm and success this year have been greater than ever, showing the good use there has been made of the thousands of packages of seeds, plants and shrubs, which are distributed yearly in the spring. A number of prizes were awarded all over the system for the best gardens, and the winners names will be announced shortly.

Now the company is sending out over half a million bulbs for fall planting and early bloom next spring. The company purchases all new varieties of flowers procurable and the markets of the world are sought for seeds and bulbs. Travelers over the C.P.R. are delighted with the green lawns, brightened by flowers, which greet their eyes, and it is a common occurrence for some flower lover from Europe or the United States to drift into the company's offices with a carefully pressed flower plucked in some station garden, to ask the name and how to cultivate it.

WHAT THE DICTIONARY SAID

"You have a model husband," said the lady who was congratulating the bride.

The next day the bride noticed the word "model" in the dictionary, and this is what she found: "Model—A small imitation of the real thing."

APPROPRIATE

"I hope they don't give my little boy any naughty nicknames in school?"

"Yes, ma; they call me 'Corns.'"

"Dreadful! And why do they call you that?"

"'Cause I'm always at the foot of the class."

SHE WAS WILLING

Norah had been guilty of what was considered an indiscretion, so the mistress of the house called her in for a reprimand.

"If such a thing occurs again, Norah," said the mistress, "I shall have to get another servant!"

"Well, mum," said Norah, "I wish ye would, there's easily enough work for two."

The first regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association was held last night with a good attendance and the usual enthusiasm that always marks a meeting of the Association. Many good suggestions for the future were introduced. The association has become affiliated with the federation of local poultry associations of Ontario. They are also endeavouring to have Professor Graham, with his lantern views, for the April meeting. A good class of birds were in competition, Black Minorcas carrying off the honours. These birds were exhibited by R. D. Robson and Geo. Buller.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

The public is again reminded that the commencement exercises of the Collegiate Institute will be held to-night in the Assembly Hall of the Institute, and that a cordial invitation is extended to be present. The programme, of a musical and literary nature, is of unusual interest, and, in addition, the occasion will be featured by the presentation of prizes to the pupils who have distinguished themselves by their educational or athletic prowess.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION COMMENCED LAST NIGHT

NEED OF MORE WORK

The first session of the Sunday School Convention was held last night in the Sunday School room of Charlotte Street Methodist church. Owing to the absence of the President of the City Association, Mr. R. J. Devey, Rev. Mr. Riddiford of Park Street Baptist Church, conducted the devotional exercises at the opening of the meeting.

Two conferences were held, one of the elementary grades and one of the Adult Bible Class, which were presided over by the Rev. R. J. M. Glassford and Mr. F. E. Kerr, respectively; after which the business on hand was disposed of, which consisted of the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, Treasurer's report and the appointment of a Nominating Committee, to elect officers for the year 1911.

The Treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $8.00.

Mr. R. J. Devey, who, by this time, had made his appearance, during the course of his opening remarks, took occasion to introduce the principal speakers of the evening, Judge Huycke and Rev. R. J. M. Glassford.

Judge Huycke, in his opening remarks, said that with the exception of the last 18 months, during which he had been a resident of Peterborough, he had been associated with Sunday School work the greater portion of his life, and he regarded it as a great pleasure to be present on such an occasion. During the course of his remark Judge Huycke said that he had in mind a number of views concerning the improvement of Sunday School work and was more fully convinced and persuaded that of all work, the Sunday School work was the work, and was firmly convinced that no work was so important to the energy and growth of the church as the Sunday School work.

I do not think that the church is fully awake to the importance of Sunday School work, said the speaker. The Sunday School is the main source of supply from which the membership of the church is created, and is the bulwark of every Christian denomination, and one thing that I would like to see occupy a more prominent place in the Sunday School is "reverence". I would also suggest that the children be taught to take a part in the devotional exercises. There is also room for improvement in Sunday School music. Some of the hymns sung in the school to-day have good words, but they are put to music totally unsuited for them, with the result that they lack soul inspiration and fail to stimulate the interest of the class.

In his closing remarks Judge Huycke referred to a trip he made to Winnipeg some time ago, during which a number of his former Sunday School scholars of Cobourg, now residents of Winnipeg, tendered him a reception.

This is my first visit to Peterborough since assuming my new duties in connection with Sunday School work, and the work, as it stands to-day, cannot even rank as a "second great" as compared with what you will meet with in the United States, was one of the startling statements he made in the course of his address. In the United States at a Sunday School convention it is possible to get the President of the Republic to grace the meeting by his presence, millionaires, state governors, etc., all take a hand in the convention. The people who grace the homes of the Canadian nation to-day went to swell the roll of Sunday School scholars twenty years ago, and yet 80 per cent. of the people of the Protestant faith were doing practically nothing towards home training or the improvement of the moral aspect of the home.

During some collegiate institute examinations held some time ago, remarked Rev. Mr. Glassford, one of the subjects embraced was the "Burial of Moses," and only five students were able to answer the query at all as to who "Moses" was, the gist of the five answers being that Moses might have been an Englishman who had lived within the last 200 years. A class of 45 girls in an Ontario school were once asked as to who Ishmael the son of Abraham and a representative of 13 millions of people, was, and only three were able to solve the question, and two of the three were Roman Catholics. Another young man in one of our Ontario cities, who had been a resident of the city all his life, lay dying in the hospital, a victim of tuberculosis. A portion of the Scriptures was read to him by a visiting minister, and the boy, who was 18 years of age, in wonder and admiration, expressed a desire to know the name of the book for he had never heard of it before. It is little wonder that we have many sad tragedies and then we ask ourselves are we holding our own. No, we are not holding our own. We have our Dairy Conventions, our Hardware Conventions and we are soon to have our Magis-

EXAMINER'S NEW STORY

Don't forget that the Examiner's new serial story "The Strange Case of Miss Cuyler," will commence in a few days. This new mystery yarn will be found one of the most interesting that the Examiner has ever published and readers of this paper should see that they do not miss a single copy. "The Strange Case of Miss Cuyler" is somewhat novel in its plot and characters, and is one of those stories which one is never satisfied to drop once it is commenced. The Examiner has no hesitation in recommending it to its readers.

It is expected that several more candidates will be initiated and some degrees will be confirmed.

AN INTERESTING TRIP THROUGH WEST INDIES

Mr. R. J. Munro Who Has Just Returned From A Five Weeks' Visit Tells the Examiner of His Impressions.

THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. R. J. Munro and his daughter, Miss Irene, arrived back in the city last evening after a five weeks' visit to the West Indies. They left here on January 26th, got on board the steamer New York, at New York, and landed in San Juan, Porto Rico, after a very pleasant voyage. He was unable to remain in that port longer than seven hours, owing to his steamer being a little late. The next port was Point a Pitre, in Guadeloupe. Mr. Munro gave a very interesting description of this place to an Examiner representative to-day. He said that the inhabitants were all coloured people. He gave a very interesting description of Bridgetown, the next place of call. Probably the most interesting sight, excepting the Panama canal, was the ruins of St. Pierre. Just after leaving Port de France, in Martinique, they sailed in near St. Pierre, in order to give the passengers a good view of the ruins of that place, after the volcanic eruption and earthquake, which visited it a short time ago. Mr. Munro said that the ruins could be seen distinctly, and the cooled lava, everything could be seen plainly.

They next called at the Port of Spain, in Trinidad. Mr. Munro said that it was extremely warm in this part, and they did not stay long. La Brea, in Trinidad, proved a very interesting place. There was what they called a pitch lake located there. Mr. Munro stated that it did not look much like a lake. The pitch was of a very funny nature. Although it was black and dirty looking, yet it could be picked up and squeezed in the hand without leaving a mark. The lake itself was like a great bog and one could walk over it. The top was allowed to harden, and then the natives would dig it out in big pieces, as much as they could lift and put it in cars. The holes that would be left, would fill up with water, but after about six days, it would be all filled up again, and as hard as ever. In these water holes, the native women would wash their clothes and spread them out to dry on the top of the pitch, and although it seemed strange, yet those clothes would be as white and clean as if they had been washed in a crystal stream.

Leaving this place they sailed to La Guayra, Venezula, but they were unable to stop there on account of the yellow fever, which was raging all through that district. The next place of call was Willemstad, in Curacao. The steamer, New York, was the largest vessel that had ever entered that port, and the natives gave it a reception. The boat was of the 10,800 tons type, and 550 feet long. The harbour was a particularly attractive one, and the passengers had a great view of the entrance. The afternoon of the day on which they arrived, was declared a holiday, and the native bands played, and a general reception was given for the passengers. The next place of call, was Colon, in Panama. Mr. Munro boarded the train at Colon and went to the city of Panama, on the way stopping off to see the different sights, among them being the Panama Canal itself. Mr. Munro gave a very interesting description of the canal. He said that there were eight railways in the bottom of the canal, and that there were at an average of 250 trains of 20 cars each taken out of the canal every day at this point. The railways were of the standard gauge, and the cars of the same size as those in Canada. There were about 2,[illegible] men at work, about 4,000 of whom were white.

He stated that there were thousands of old French engines and cars of the old 3 1-2 ft. gauge lying there decaying. The new standard gauge had been used exclusively. The natives were burying a lot of the old engines.

Kingston, Jamaica, was the next stopping place. Mr. Munro said that

Mrs. Robinson Is Released

St. Peter's T. A. S. are preparing to celebrate St. Patrick's Day with all the old-time vigour. The programme is somewhat of a departure from any previous year, as they believe that a change now and then is appreciated by the public. One special feature of the programme will be a play in three acts, entitled "The Golden Slipper," one of the most beautiful old-time fairy tales of Ireland dramatized. The entertainment will also be interspersed with character songs, a minuet dance, and a Hobby Horse Brigade, making altogether the best entertainment the T. A. S. has had the good fortune of presenting in the Opera House. Every member of the organization is working indefatigably with a view to making the entertainment surpass all others previously given.

STALWART CANADIANISM.

A robust Canadian spirit inspires an article in the Bobcaygeon Independent, entitled "Canada First." Referring to Champ Clark's utterance the Independent says that the annexation cry has been raised before.

"When the old reciprocity arrangements were neded, and the tariff wall erected along the United States boundary, the same cry was well and is shaping up so raised. Shut Canada out of our markets, they said, and they will very soon see the advantage of annexation. But Canada did not annex. Canada went right on as if nothing had happened, and proceeded to work out its destiny in its own way. It has got along so robustly, those to the south have arrived at the opinion that it would be of mutual advantage to swap natural products."

The Independent does not fear the result. "Canada has already given indication of its metal in nation building, and there need be no fear of Canadianism being absorbed by any other ism on this continent or off it." This article has the right Canadian ring. It has the note of confidence and self-assertion. Why should Canada be more afraid of freedom than the British Islands? Why should we be afraid that Canadianism will be destroyed by the present agreement, any more than Americanism?

ANOTHER SPASM.

Without doubt there is a very considerable volume of independent and disinterested opposition to the agreement. A blind man can see that the agitation, to a large degree, is not spontaneous. It is being planned, nursed, stage-managed, financed and advertised. Who are the men on the job? First, of course, the leaders of the Conservative party, who, living up to the full opportunities of their positions, are opposing the government with all resources at their command. The Toronto machinery of the party is adept at forming "raging and tearing" propaganda. Kindly recall Dundonald, the school question and the naval controversy. Each of these agitations started off at a terrific clip with The News and The Telegram pounding on the big war drums, and working up the marching hosts to a frenzy. They mostly petered out, it will be recalled, and nobody was a bit worse for all the terrific cursing in which Brer Willison et al. indulged.

If the Toronto Conservatives think this the time and opportunity for another spasm, let them have it. Possibly they need one about so often to relieve the pressure.

THE FARMERS' CASE.

(Toronto Star)

The Hon. Sydney Fisher, who replied to Mr. Sifton's speech, has been Minister of Agriculture of Canada for nearly fifteen years, and ought to be an authority on a question which mainly concerns the farmers of Canada and the agricultural industry. Mr. Fisher says that Canada is not losing the British market, but simply adding another great market to its list. The free market open to the Canadian farmer, if the agreement is ratified, will be one hundred and forty-five millions of people, all generous livers and large consumers of food.

The protests against reciprocity come, not from farmers, nor from consumers of food, but from those who stand between the farmer and the consumer, or from those who fear that if there is free trade in farm products, the farmer will begin to object to pay protective duties on manufactures.

The tone of some of these protests would convey the impression that the agreement is a coercive measure, compelling the farmer to abandon his present methods of agriculture, raise barley and cattle for the market of the United States, and impoverish his land by poor farming. The measure is one, not of coercion, but of greater freedom. The Canadian farmer will not raise products for the market of the United States unless it pays him to do so. If he finds that a certain method of cultivation, though profitable to the present, exhausts the fertility of his land it is to be presumed that he will change his methods, as any other intelligent man would do. Agricultural science will not be brought to a standstill by reciprocity. On the contrary, it may be expected that scientific farming will be stimulated by the enlargement of the market, and the necessity of studying the tastes of a great variety of customers. If a large market leads to specialization in manufacturing industry, why not in farming?

Underlying a good deal of the criticism of the agreement is a notion that the farmer is either unpatriotic or does not understand his own business. If an outsider criticises a banker for investing funds in the United States, he is quickly told that he is discussing a question which he does not understand. No one would presume to dictate to a manufacturer who seeks to introduce his wares in foreign markets; no one tells him that he ought to be patriotic enough to restrict his enterprise to the British Empire. The farmer is entitled to the same liberty of action; and liberty is the only benefit he will obtain from the agreement now under consideration.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, March 2.—Uneasy shorts in a scramble to buy wheat forced prices up most of the time to-day. There was also considerable bull campaigning by a number of large traders. Chief help came from a statement that only 8,700,000 bushels remained at present in the hands of Canadian farmers. Closing prices were easy, however, at a net advance of ½c to ¾c. Latest figures showed corn ¼c to ⅜c above last night. Oats, off a shade to ⅛c, and hog products at 2½c to 47½c decline.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ¼d to ½d higher than yesterday on wheat, and ¼d to ½d higher on corn. Berlin wheat closed ⅝c higher, Buda Pest ¼d lower.

Oats were quiet and steady. The foreign demand for spring wheat flour was larger, and as bids in some cases were 3d to 6d per pack higher, a few sales were made. RECIPROCITY WILL HELP GROWERS OF SUGAR BEET

(Toronto Star.)

WALLACEBURG, MARCH 2—What is a Gordon Conservative?

Folks hereabouts would answer the question readily. A Gordon Conservative is an elector who always votes with his party, except when D. A. Gordon, M.P., is a candidate. Then he votes for Gordon, and Mr. Gordon is a Grit. The people of the district swear by him; no political crowbar will pry them away from their allegiance.

Mr. Gordon is one of the Liberal manufacturers whose enterprises — especially his salt works—were hit by the tariff agreement, but he told The Star at the time that if the measure was for the good of the country at large, he would not complain. Among his factories is a large sugar works at Wallaceburg, and he buys the product of a large acreage of land in this and neighbouring counties, which is given over to the raising of sugar beets.

Growing the Sugar Beet.

There is a popular idea that the best sugar comes from cane. Experts declare, however, that properly refined beet sugar cannot be detected from the other, as the chemical contents of both are the same. In Kent, Essex, and Lambton the growers say that there is more money in beets than in corn. When better methods of cultivation bring up the average production from but little over ten tons per acre, where it stands now, to fourteen or fifteen tons, the farmers' profit will be still larger. As it is, some fields are good for as high as 20 tons to the acre, but others fall woefully short of an average yield because of carelessness in cultivation. England has lately experimented with sugar beets and the yield has been unexpectedly rich 21½ tons to the acre, of beets exceptionally rich in sugar. The object is not to grow a big beet, but a long one, for the beet which goes deep into the soil is likely to contain the maximum proportion of sugar.

Three Great Beet Counties.

In Kent, Essex and Lambton the growing of sugar beets has become popular to a degree which the rest of Ontario does not realize. In 1901 there were but 900 acres of sugar beets in the Province. In 1909 the acreage was 11,000. In 1910 it was 14,000. It is estimated that 18,000 acres of beets will be grown this year. In 1910 the beets produced in the three counties mentioned weighed 94,000 tons. These figures give some idea of the future of the sugar beet industry. It is said to have an excellent effect upon the crop which follow it, as a great part of the fertility is returned to the soil in the beet tops, and the beet gets its nourishment much deeper than other crops can reach.

It is interesting to note that in 1910 the following amounts were paid out for beets grown in Ontario:

Dominion Sugar Co.	$365,000
	$617,000

It will be seen that practically two-fifths of the Ontario crop went to the United States despite a duty of 40 cents per ton. Sugar beets are now to be on the free list, and farmers of the district are overjoyed at the free market which will thus be opened to them.

A Conservative Tribute.

The Star man was looking for Sheppard Somers, a Liberal, who has had some experience growing sugar beets. He found him in a group which was gathered around a stove in a little Wallaceburg office. If stoves could tell all they hear, some highly interesting discussions would be reported. It is over the stove that the hard-headed farmer threshes out his problems with his neighbours, and he usually talks some sense.

Mr. Somers was asked his opinion of reciprocity; also if he was acquainted with any Conservatives who favour the agreement. Before he had time to answer, another member of the group leveled an accusing finger at Austin Hazzard, a well known farmer of the district, and the dialogue which followed was highly interesting.

"Yes," said Mr. Hazzard. "I'm a Tory, but this reciprocity business looks all right to me. It is the bigger market that we want, and now we're going to get it."

"It's the best thing that ever happened," put in Mr. Somers.

"Well you," went on Mr. Hazzard. "It's this cursed hedging in of trade that we farmers have had to put up with for years. It is most unreasonable to say that putting a big tariff wall across this country makes people prosperous, or that removing it will make them disloyal."

"It's just like Canada Company lands," said Mr. Somers. "They were held for years to the disadvantage of the country."

"That's it," assented his Conservative friend. "It was another case of checking natural trade. I've had experience of the operation of the tariff wall, and I know. Why, when I was building my house I went to Sarnia for lumber. I did not see anything to suit me, so I went to Port Huron. There I found plenty of better and much cheaper lumber than in Sarnia. But what was I up against? Why a 20 per cent. tariff wall, which made it impossible for me to buy."

"And there's hay," suggested another member of the group.

"Yes," said Mr. Hazzard, "there's hay. It is quoted at $8 here. In fact it becomes a drug on the market, and they can't get more than $7. Across the border it would fetch over double that."

Speaking on the Street.

Two farmers in fur coats were talking on the street in Wallaceburg. The Star man asked them for their opinion on the reciprocity agreement.

"Well," said one, who turned out to be George Malwood, "it may not do much for our horses, but for sugar beets and some other crops, I guess it will be all right."

"Yes," said Charles Wade, who was the other man on the spot, "it looks will be a competing market in the machinery line, though goodness knows that will likely be dear enough yet."

"I'd be a Tory if I was like my father," observed Mr. Malwood, "but I've voted both ways." "Same with me," said the other man. It is a safe guess that these are both "Gordon Conservatives."

Two Conservatives Approve.

A couple of well-known Conservative farmers who believe that the reciprocity agreement will benefit them are Wm. Trotter, of Chatham Township, and Frank Shaw, of the East Branch. Both grow sugar beets, but their testimony had to do chiefly with their other crops.

"I deal largely in stock," said Mr. Trotter, "and I think the agreement will help us out very much. There will be acompeting market in the United States even if we do not use it. I am a Conservative, and I find many of my friends who are farmers speaking in favour of reciprocity."

"As a farmer," Mr. Shaw told The Star, "I approve of the agreement. It will give us a market for our stock, our grain and our hay; indeed it will make an opening for many things we grow. This is only my opinion as a farmer, and not as to the general effect upon the whole country."

A Former Conservative Candidate.

The record of Wallaceburg opinion would be incomplete without a reference to the attitude, past and present, of Mr. J. S. Fraser, a former Conservative candidate. When the reciprocity agreement was made public, he besought his friends to put their own interests before partyism for once. Since that time, he has spoken strongly in favour of reciprocity, on more than one occasion. When seen by The Star, however, he announced that he now opposes the measure. His reasons are valuable both because of the moderation with which he expresses himself, and because, in giving them, he unconsciously illustrated the manner in which reduction of duty accrues to the advantage of others besides the agriculturist.

"I do not think," he said, "that the farmer will derive more than 25 per cent. of the benefit which apparently accrues to him as the result of the removal of United States duties. I think it will be distributed in four directions: 1 Market prices will, to a certain extent, diminish; that is, a part of the reduction will go to the consumer. 2. The transportation companies will absorb a certain part of the apparent advantage. 3. Jobbers will absorb another. So the benefit will be divided into four parts, of which the farmer, if he is lucky, will receive one.

"I have come to this conclusion," said Mr. Fraser, "because I have observed the effect of a reduction of duty on stoves by the United States some years ago. The manufacturers here expected to reap a benefit of $1 per thousand. Instead of that, they actually benefited to the extent of 25 cents per thousand, the balance being consumed by the transportation companies, the consumer, and the dealer.

"As to the present agreement, so far as the border counties are concerned, the immediate effect will be to enhance the value of farm products to a certain extent. I fear, though, that in the course of a couple of years, owing to the trusts and cold storage, the farmers will be in the same position as those of the United States, and acre for acre I believe the Canadian farmers now make as much money."

"You approval of the agreement at first?"

"Yes," said Mr. Fraser. "I did."

As it is, he concedes a present benefit to the farmers of his district, which, for a Conservative candidate in a public interview, is going quite as far as would be expected.

Cut Off Own Leg.

Ogdensburg, N.Y., March 3.—Remarkable grit saved the life yesterday of Daniel Snyder, a woodsman caught beneath a fallen tree near Brushton. Snyder's leg, crushed by the weight of tons of wood, hung by shreds to his body and he was rapidly bleeding to death when he crawled to his axe, severed the limb with it, ripped off his shirt and checked the flow of blood by binding it tightly about the stump. He then lay back and awaited the arrival of help. When fellow woodsmen took him to a hospital surgeons perfected his crude amputation by removing another portion of the crushed limb. His recovery is expected.

PETERBOROUGH SEVEN BEAT THE T.A.A.C. TEAM

Local Intermediates Trimmed Toronto Seniors by 11 Goals to 6---Blue and White Team Showed Superiority all the Way Through.

The Peterborough intermediates had not much trouble in beating the senior Toronto Athletic Club team in the exhibition game at Brock street last night, the score at the finish being 11 to 6 and at the half 6 to 3 in favour of the blue and white team. The result of the game was never much in doubt, although at that it was a snappy, well played and interesting exhibition, which never lagged from start to finish. The Petes had the T. A.A.C. team pretty well in hand all through, showing a better defence and more finished combination and stick handling on the forward line. The Crimson team had a lot of speed, but failed to show the boring in qualities that distinguished the play of the Peterborough team. The visitors were kept out in grand style by the cross the rink defence of Heffernan and Bond and their shots from outside were pie for Derocher, who was dead on and picked off the heaves like cherries. The Petes on the other hand played a short quick passing game and went right in before shooting. The superiority of this method is indicated by the score, which is a fair criterion of the play.

Addison, the Simcoes A goal keeper and Ken Crane formerly of Peterborough, were on the line-up of the visitors, who used eight men, substituting Dion for McKee at half time. The Crimson team failed to show the class that was expected of them after their showing against Eatons. McCreath, about which so much has been heard, was a disappointment and did not uncover very much. The team as a whole failed to play combination and their shooting was not up to the mark. In fact the Petes were superior at all points except in the matter of skating and here, too, the locals easily held their own.

The game was interesting all through, both teams working hard, and there was about everything that goes to make up a good hockey game. The checking was hard and close, but not unnecessarily rough, and the small crowd of fans enjoyed the contest thoroughly. The visitors were only in front once. Crane getting the first goal from a scrimmage shortly after the game started. The Petes got four in a row before T.A.A.C scored a brace of counters and then the locals added a couple more before the half.

In the second half T. A. A. C started out well by scoring the first goal. Peterborough retaliated, but the visitors came back with another. The homesters put the game on ice then by banging four more past Addison and the Crimson ended the scoring with another goal.

All the Peterborough team showed good form. The defence was cool and steady, refusing to be drawn out, and as a result kept the Athletic Club marksmen peging away from well out. Derocher handled the long shots of the visitors in grand style, not a single drive from outside the defence beating him, while he had a score of good stops of shots from close in to his credit. Bond and Heffernan showed good judgment in their checking and both rushed well, relieving frequently on well timed dashes down the ice, and their work all through was effective and clever. The forwards played good combination and in the thick of the play all the way. Early in the game they did not check back as closely as has been their habit, but they made up for this later on by coming back like race horses. They broke away together nicely, three and four together and went in on top of the nets before letting drive. Kelly showed more speed than any man on the ice and easily ran away from Brown, the T.A.A.C. right wing man, who was selected on the All Star senior cast. "Bud" was going all the Peterborough boy who played for the T.A.A.C. Team last night

the time and was equally effective on the offence and on the attack. Park showed his usual scoring ability and rushed beautifully while Ray was in the thic kof the play all the way, doing some nice rushing and checking. Sorel was there or thereabouts at all times.

For T.A.A.C. Babe Burkhart, the husky defence man, was perhaps the most effective player. He is a good check and pretty hard to get around, although his methods are not always the most ladylike. He showed speed in his rushes but was not very effective in the neighbourhood of the nets. Addison proved himself a classy goal minder, getting in the way of hosts of shots, and several times saving scores by charging the man with the rubber, when his defence was beaten. Ken Crane had his old time dangerous shot and tore off some pretty rushes, although his stick handling did not seem as good as he showed last season. Dion, the little Ottawa man who played rover the last half, has a fine turn of speed and is a good stick handler, but wastes a lot of time circling around and was usually checked before he got in close. McCreath was not very strongly in evidence in the play. Brown worked hard, but had more than he wanted looking after Kelly. W. O'Brien handled the game satisfactorily as referee. The teams were:

Play was even at the start, with both defences called on to turn Addison blocked a couple from close in off a couple of long heaves. Finally off a couple of long heaves. Finally Crane beat him with a shot from a scrimmage. Peterborough 0, T. A. A. C. 1.

Orillia Stopped Kingston's List Of Victories---Beat The Frontenacs 6 To 5

ORILLIA, MARCH 2.—Enthusiasm ran high to-night when the home team defeated the Frontenacs of Kingston in the junior championship finals by a score of 6 to 5. Orillia goes back to Kingston on Monday with a lead of one goal.

Additional seating capacity had been put in the rink, and the building was crowded to the doors, over two thousand people being present. The game was one of the fastest ever played on Orillia ice, and was a splendid exhibition of clean hockey. The ice was in excellent condition. The game started with a rush, play being centred around the Kingston net. After three minutes play Jupp and Hunt were sent to the fence for one minute. They had barely returned to the ice when Hunt got the puck and scored for Kingston. Davidson was unfortunately struck in the face, and was obliged to leave the ice, Thornton going off to even up. Jupp then scored for Orillia, and Butterfield was sent to the fence for tripping Brouse. Davidson and Thornton were soon back in the game and Jupp and Thornton put the puck into the net by a pretty piece of play, giving Orillia the lead by one goal. After five minutes' play long shot, the puck hitting Kingston's cover-point scored. Davidson scored after a fine play by Kingston. Thornton evened up the score and a minute before half time was called Orillia got in another, making the score 4 to 3 for Orillia at half time.

Play in the second half started off in the vicinity of the Kingston net, and the goalkeeper was kept busy warding off shot after shot. Kingston, however, got the first goal, evening the score. The next goal was taken by Jupp, who made a lone rush and a long shot, the puc khitting Kingston's cover-point and bouncing into the net. McNabb did the lone act and scored another for Orillia. After ten minutes' hard playing, Kingston scored the last goal, and time was called with the score 6 to 5 for Orillia. Davidson, Brouse and Williams were the stars for Kingston.

The Orillia boys did some very pretty combination play, which kept their opponents guessing. Kingston had the advantage in size and weight over their opponents. The line-up:

Referee—Wettlaufer, Berlin.

D MINION-OTTAWA TEAM GOES INTO THE FINALS

The Dominion-Ottawa team eliminated the Royal-Commerce team from the semi-finals of the Bank League yesterday afternoon by winning an easy victory over the Hunter Street combination by 12 goals to 3, and thus going into the finals with the Montreal team. The decisive game will be played to-morrow afternoon at 5 o'clock at Brock Street Rink, and promises to be the best game of the season in the Financiers' League. The Montrealers defeated Dominion-Ottawa in an exciting game on Monday by 3 to 2, and to-morrow's battle should be a corker.

The Dominion-Ottawa had not much trouble in putting the Royal-Commerce out of the running. They were always in front, leading at half time by 5 goals to 2, and although the Royal-Commerce scored the first goal after the rest, the winners ran in seven counters in a row, while the garnet and gray outfit were blanked The game was played with five men a side. Hague Sawers was a satisfactory referee. The teams were:

If weather conditions are favourable Peterborough fans will get a chance next week of seeing the Peterborough Intermediates in action against an All Star Senior O. H. A. team selected from the Toronto teams Trainer Billy Breen is in Toronto at the present time, making arrangements for the battle, and Harvey Sproule, the well-known O. H. A. referee, is picking the Toronto seven which should be one of the strongest ever seen here. Its personnel will depend a good deal on the result of to-morrow night's senior final game between Argonauts and Eaton's, the winners of which, of course, will not be available next week, "Kurnel" Ridpath, the captain of the Parkdale seven, will be with the All Stars, as will Rankin, Preston and Hyland of the Eatons if Argos win to-morrow night. On the other hand, if Eatons win, Murphy and other Argonaut stars will be seen here. The All Stars are being selected for a series of games with teams outside of Toronto, and will likely play here on Wednesday night and Midland on Friday. It should be the best game of the year.

CURLING

The open bonspiel of the Peterborough Curling Club opened last night at the Charlotte street rink when the preliminary draw was played off. There is keen interest among the curlers over the competition, and the games last night proved very exciting and interesting. In nearly every case the game was close all through and three of the games were won by one shot, two others by two and the biggest margin was three. The battle between Skips Ferguson and McDermid was especially close. They were tied at the finish and had to play an extra end. Skip McDermid was lying one until Skip Ferguson played his last stone succeeding in carrying out his opponent's stone and counting himself, winning the game by one. The scores in the preliminary were:

Skip Giroux 8, Skip Pinchin 11.
Skip McDermid 10, Skip Ferguson 11.
Skip Brighiman 12, Skip Lang 11.
Skip Merritt 12, Skip Dr. Greer 13.
Skip Hicks 11, Skip Thompson 18.
Skip Davidson 7, Skip Fitzgerald 9.

The results of the four round series recently played by the lady curlers of Peterborough on the local ice resulted in a win for Skip Mrs. Ritchie's rink, consisting of the following players, Miss Davidson, Mrs. Hill, Mrs. Archer and Mrs Ritchie, skip.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The two games of basketball played on the Y. M. C. A. floor yesterday were good contests. The first, between the Collegiate five and the Peterborough Business College, resulted in a win for the Collegiate team; score 37 to 9.

The second game was between teams from the Junior school boys' class and the Business Boys' class, and it was a most interesting game to watch, the first half ending 5 to 2 in favour of the Junior Class team, the final score also being in favour of the Juniors; score, Juniors, 19; Business Boys, 9. These two teams will meet again next Thursday night at 7.15 for a return game, when the winners of this series will go up against Mr. Tait's bunch of educationalists.

Every member of the Junior Class is requested to put in an appearance at class to-morrow morning and also remember that those who do not turn out to get in readiness for the closing exercises will have to look on, instead of taking part in the fun on March 24th.

Two fast games of basketball will be played in the City Basketball League to-night in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium, when the Fairies meet the Giants and the Pirates clash with the Ponies. As all four teams are playing good ball two games worth going some distance to see will result.

"The Goddess Of Liberty"

"The Goddess of Liberty," with Robert H. Wilson and Violet Seaton two clever exponents of musical comedy, supported by a superb company of seventy-five. The tour this season is under the personal direction of Mort. H. Singer, and will be seen here at the Grand on Monday, March 6th. The production will be seen the same as originally produced for over one solid year at the Princess Theatre, Chicago, where it received the unanimous approval of both press and public.

It is said to be an exceptionally strong one with a magnificent chorus of over fifty beautiful singing and dancing girls, including the famous Princess dancers and show girls. "The Goddess of Liberty" comes here in all its freshness after having just performed the nearly impossible—that of playing over one solid year in the city of Chicago at the Princess Theatre. The mere mention of the fact that the tour of this company is under the personal direction of Mort. H. Singer is a sufficient guarantee to insure the local public that "The Goddess of Liberty" is the best.

XVI.—Emergencies In the Home

By EUGENE L. FISK, M. D.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

NOTWITHSTANDING all that has been written and uttered regarding "man's inhumanity to man," the first impulse of the average man is to help a fellow being in distress. This is well exemplified by the agility with which half a dozen people unasked will chase a hat that has been blown off.

When accident or disease occurs in the household, however, successful assistance is not so easily rendered as in the case of the wind blown hat. The most willing hands and heads may bring injury rather than relief through an excess of zeal and ignorance of how to direct it.

Fainting Spells.

Ordinary fainting spells, excluding cases of unconsciousness, due to heart disease, kidney trouble, apoplexy, etc., may be due to a number of causes—shock, indigestion, eye strain, lack of food, bowel trouble, etc. In such cases the patient should be placed in a reclining position, with the feet higher than the head and the clothing loosened about the neck and chest. Cold water dashed in the face will usually suffice to restore consciousness. Aromatic spirits of ammonia inhaled or if the patient is able to swallow fifteen to thirty drops in a wineglass of water is a good restorative. Strong ammonia should not be applied to the nostrils of an unconscious person, as extreme irritation of the mucous membrane may result before the patient becomes conscious of it.

An impending faint may be prevented by having the patient place his head in his hands and lower it between his knees while sitting down. This strained position tends to retain the blood in the upper portion of the body and prevent the bloodless condition of the brain, which is responsible for the unconsciousness.

AN IMPENDING FAINT MAY BE PREVENTED BY HAVING THE PATIENT PLACE HIS HEAD IN HIS HANDS AND LOWER IT BETWEEN HIS KNEES WHILE SITTING DOWN.

The natural impulse is to raise the head and body of a patient who has fainted. This is the worst possible thing to do. Feet high and head low is the rule.

Sunstroke.

The symptoms of sunstroke are very high temperature, ranging from 104 to 112 degrees F., congested countenance, heavy breathing and unconsciousness. This condition may be mistaken for apoplexy if the temperature is not taken.

The remedy is, in a word, cold. If it is not possible to give a full ice cold bath iced cloths should be applied to teh head, neck and chest and the extremities bathed in cold water. The application of cold must be continued until the temperature drops to normal and resumed if it rises.

The symptoms of heat exhaustion are the reverse of those above described. The temperature may be subnormal, the face is pale, and there is a condition analogous to shock, with a bloodless brain.

The treatment must be directed against these conditions. The application of heat to the body and extremities is necessary by means of hot water bags, bottles, etc. Coffee, essence of ginger or other stimulants should be taken internally. The reclining position as advised for fainting spells is also indicated.

Caution.—It is not unusual for physicians to be called in such cases in hot weather and find the patient's head loyally elevated by anxious friends and cold applications being assiduously applied. Although this condition is due to heat, cold will only aggravate it.

Convulsions, Etc.

In true epilepsy the patient should be made as comfortable as possible during the attack and prevented from injuring himself.

Convulsions in children may be due to comparatively trivial causes—teething, indigestion, worms, etc. Sometimes a convulsion is the first sign of a serious acute disease, as infectious fever, pneumonia, etc.

The child should be put in a hot bath (100 to 104 degrees F.), for about five minutes. This will usually control the spasm, and the patient can be put to bed and other necessary measures taken, especially cleaning out the bowels, which may be most rapidly accomplished by an enema. A physician should, of course, be called.

Surgical Troubles.

Sprains.—In this condition there is laceration of ligaments, blood vessels and other structures surrounding a joint. The first treatment is to place the injured part in hot water and apply hot cloths for half an hour. The joint should then be bandaged, not too tightly, and kept at rest until the acute swelling and tenderness subside. Alternate applications of hot and cold water poured over the joint from a pitcher are often beneficial. It is a mistake to attempt continuous self treatment of a severe sprain. Months of suffering and crippling may result from neglect to secure early surgical aid. The X ray has demonstrated that supposed simple sprains are often complicated by fractures.

Fractures.

When a limb is fractured the first step is to apply a temporary splint in order to prevent needless injury to soft parts by the ends of the fractured bone. Any stiff material, an umbrella, rolled up newspapers, canes, etc., may be bound to the limb by handkerchiefs, towels or bandages until surgical aid has been procured. In fractures of the leg one leg may be bound to the other. If the skin has been broken the fracture is termed compound, and extreme care is necessary to prevent further laceration or infection of the tissues.

Wounds.

Slight punctured or lacerated wounds are often neglected or improperly treated, owing to the fact that no medical aid is sought. For the reason that blood poison and lockjaw are not uncommon following comparatively trivial injuries all wounds should be cleansed as quickly as possible with peroxide of hydrogen, turpentine or some antiseptic solution. A sterilized gauze pad should then be applied and held in place by rubber adhesive plaster or gauze bandages. The use of strong antiseptic solutions in wounds is no longer customary. When the wound is infected, as evidenced by heat, redness, swelling or discharge of pus, the parts should be cleansed frequently with peroxide of hydrogen and a simple wet dressing applied as follows: A gauze pad is bandaged over the wound and kept moist with a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda in boiled water. Antiseptic solutions kill germs, but they also interfere with the natural reparative work of the body cells.

Dangers of Carbolic Acid.

Carbolic acid should be banished from the household, except in the form of carbolated vaseline. This preparation may be useful to apply to cuts or sores in emergencies. Solutions of carbolic acid constantly applied to the extremities, fingers, toes, etc., have been known to cause gangrene.

Every useful purpose served by carbolic acid as a household remedy can be served by simple nonpoisonous antiseptics, such as a saturated solution of boric acid or the official liquor antisepticus of the United States Pharmacopoeia. Diluted with several parts of water, this latter preparation may be used whenever a cleansing antiseptic wash is required.

Burns.

Probably nothing causes more excitement in the household than burns or scalds, and this explains why first aid is so seldom properly and promptly applied.

The most convenient and perhaps the best remedy to apply is ordinary baking soda. This may be applied in powder and the parts wrapped in clean linen cloths, gauze, etc., and then covered with cotton, or the bandages may be saturated and kept moist with a strong solution of the soda. Blisters should be punctured with a needle that has been sterilized in boiling water, but the skin should not be removed.

When a burn is very extensive immediate proper dressing is difficult, and it is extremely important to reduce the shock and protect the burned area from the air. This may be quickly done by placing the patient in a warm salt bath, keeping the temperature between 94 and 104 degrees F. Such treatment is often continued for a long time, replenishing the water, of course, as it becomes contaminated. Stimulants internally are called for.

Ear Emergencies.

Accumulations of wax or foreign bodies in the ear should be removed by syringing with warm water or saturated solution of boric acid. Insects may be suffocated with a few drops of pure sweet oil and then removed by syringing with warm water. It is a bad practice to use oil in the ear for the removal of wax. If syringing with warm water does not suffice a physician should be consulted.

Earache is usually due to inflammation, which may develop into suppuration and abscess. Heat should be applied by means of hot water bags, hot clay poultice (Cataplasma kaolin U. S. P.) or hot fomentations. Hot water may be poured into the ear while the patient reclines on his side with the affected ear uppermost, covering the affected ear with cloths saturated with hot water and the whole covered over with a flannel pad.

Persistent.

"Our Tommy," said the boy's mother, "ought to make a success in life. He shows great determination to stick to anything he undertakes."

"Does he?" queried the proud father.

"Yes," she replied. "Why, he put in the whole day making soap bubbles and trying to tie a string to them."—Chicago News.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE friends thou hast and their adoption tried Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel? —Shakespeare.
"For his friend is another self." —Aristotle.

If you heard that a friend of yours — not an acquaintance, not a "speech friend," as one of our cleverest word coiners has so aptly called that vast outer circle of our associates, but a real FRIEND with all that word ought to convey—had said or done some unkind thing against you which you would have been incapable of, if the case were reversed, what would you do?

Would you say, "My friend has done this thing. Therefore he cannot be what I thought he was?" Or would you place your belief in your friend's character above your belief in appearances and say, "The story must be false My friend is incapable of such a thing?"

One of my young girl friends came to me the other day wretched and unhappy and almost sick because she had heard that a friend of her's whom she loved almost as a sister had tried to prevent her election to a certain club.

"My dear," I said, after she had poured out her tale of woe, "Tell me something. Would you have done this to her?"

The little lady's big blue eyes opened wide in amazement at such a question.

"Why, you KNOW I couldn't possibly, Miss Cameron," she retorted.

"Very well," I said. "Then I think you are insulting your friend. You have so little faith in her that you believe she would do a mean thing that you yourself are absolutely incapable of."

The little lady thought it over a minute. "That isn't a very fair thing to do, is it?" she asked.

And yet how many of us do that same thing.

That is—suspect our friends of meanness and unkindness of which we believe ourselves quite incapable.

Seems to me that's conceit as well as unfair.

Why should we think ourselves so much better than the rest of the world that we should be ready to believe our standard of conduct higher than theirs?

It seems to me that any fair-minded person owes it to his sense of justice to do two things in regard to any evil report that he hears of his friend.

First let him say, "I will not believe my friend guilty of anything that I myself am incapable of."

Secondly, instead of intrenching himself in an atmosphere of constraint and unexpected reproach as regards that friend, let him go straight to him and say, "My friend, I have heard something about you that I cannot believe. Will you confirm my belief in you by denying this rumour?"

If people would follow these two rules I have no doubt that nine out of ten misunderstandings would be still-born.

A STUBBORN CINDERELLA

Kingston theatre-goers were treated to a fine musical comedy last night, when "A Stubborn Cinderella" was presented. Brimful of sweet, catchy music, just the kind that makes you happy, and comedy work of the first order, the play ranks among the best of its kind ever seen in Kingston. The production was splendidly put on. All the principal parts are in able hand. The entire performance of three acts is given with such vim, as to be very entertaining. The chorus is strong, and costumes good. All the musical numbers were well received and some had to be given three or four times. Miss Kirke is delightful in every way. There is no more charming comedienne or sweeter singer on the musical comedy stage.

There is more life and snap in the work of the company than in that of any other musical comedy organization seen here in years. The whole company enters into the spirit of the production. This has a telling effect upon an audience, and it was shown by the hearty applause given throughout. The girls are full of life, for they are youthful. There are no old-stagers among them, for Manager Charles A. Goettler, who controls the production, and accompanies it, has picked his company with care.

HONOURED BY FRIENDS ON LEAVING FOR WEST

At the home of Mrs. Sam Thomas, 516 Chamberlain street, a most delightful time was spent on the occasion of saying good-bye to two of their friends, Mr Percy Castle and Mr. John Campbell, who are leaving Peterborough for Alberta. The home was besieged by about 40 guests. Dancing, singing, and playing games were the features of the evening. During the progress of the games a halt was called and silence maintained for the purpose of presenting a gold stick pin to each of the departing friends. An address was ably read by Mr. Sam Thomas, which reads as follows :

Dear friends,—With all sincerity in our hearts we, one and all, do deeply regret to see you going from our midst. But wherever you are, your memory will always remain fresh to our minds. Your foremost actions and courteous manners in our many pleasant socials, which you have participated in, will be greatly missed, and will be a difficult task to substitute you. We could not allow you to leave us without showing the love and respect that we have toward you. We ask you to kindly accept this small token, not only for its value, but for remembrance of your friends in the City of Peterborough. We all combine and wish you long life, success, good luck, and prosperity in all your undertakings the remainder of your life.

(Signed) Your friends,

F. Wilson, V. Booth, L. Keel, M. Greenwood, M. Thomas, T. Hughes, A. Merrett, Mat. Armstrong, S. Hussy, S. Thomas, F. Booth, A. Millard, Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, E. Thomas, T. Allan.

Both recipients made a very suitable reply, giving their reasons for leaving the city.

Many songs were sung by Mr. Tom Hykes, Miss Keel, Mr. Ted. Allan and Miss Greenwood.

Mr. Castle entertained the crowd with his large gramaphone and endless records. The party broke up at an early hour, after a delightful time.

HORSE WENT THROUGH ICE OF BUCKHORN LAKE

CHEMONG, MARCH 2.—William Clarkson of Lakehurst, the game and fishery overseer, met with an exciting adventure while crossing Buckhorn Lake, near this village, on Wednesday evening. In some manner he drove off the righ road and his horse broke through the ice. Fortunately, however, one of the villagers happened to be out on the ice and hastened back to the village to give the alarm. Eight or ten men rushed to the rescue and succeeded in getting the horse on firm ice in the nick of time. Mr. Clarkson was none the worse for his adventure, but it necessitated him remaining in the village all night. He was the guest of Mr. Dan Whetung.

INTRODUCTORY SALE IS A GREAT SUCCESS

The sale which was adopted by Mr. Sukloff as a means of introducing himself to the people of Peterborough is serving its purpose admirably, the extraordinary list of bargains which he is offering having been responsible for a rush to his store which opened on Wednesday at 166 Simcoe street. Mr. Sukloff has an entirely new stock of dry goods, ladies and men's ready-to-wear clothing, boots and shoes, rugs, carpets, house furnishings, etc., all of which are being sold at greatly reduced prices, affording an unique opportunity to buy spring goods at slight cost. Mr. Sukloff comes to Peterborough with the best of business reputations and will undoubtedly receive a large share of patronage here. His stock is complete, new and extensive and his prices will prove an eye opener to many people. The present sale affords a good opportunity of getting acquainted with the latest addition to the ranks of Peterborough's merchants.

INTERESTING TRIP THROUGH THE WEST INDIES

that this was a nice island, with all kinds of tropical fruits, and the stores were all being built up new, and of splendid class. They are all two story structures and built strongly of solid concrete. He sailed from here to Portau Prince in Hayti. He said that this was the worst place he had called at on the whole route. It was dirty and sultry hot, a rebellion had just taken place and the soldiers were parading the streets. It was market day, when the steamer arrived, and the dirty coloured natives were thronging into the town, carrying their produce on their heads. The whole scene was simply disgusting. Santiago, in Cuba, was the next place visited. Mr. Munro said that this was a very nice town. He stayed there over Sunday, and the native bands paraded the streets, the people all joining in a grand promenade.

Havana was the next calling place. He stated that it was a beautiful city of about 400,000 of a population. The streets were all paved and the street car service was also good. Nassau, in the Bahamas was next called at. The natives there were all dark, but spoke English. They told Mr. Munro that they were desirous of joining Canada, and had been holding meetings previous to the arrival of the steamer. At these meetings, the general feeling was to join Canada. He stated that this was a great fruit district. All the tropical fruits were in abundance. Just across the harbour from Nassau, was Hog Island. A person could get across in a small boat for a shilling, and after getting across was given all kinds of fruit to eat, and all he wanted to carry away.

Mr. Munro said he was much pleased with the trip, but after all he did not see a place that he would rather be in than in Peterborough.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

trate's Association, all of which are welcomed with open arms, but when you mention a Sunday School convention it is subject to ridicule and receives scant attention from the public in general. But God will hold us accountable. The speaker, in conclusion, referred to the North West, that vast country which is being rapidly filled up by a conglomeration of people of every nationality, as being God's crucible out of which a new race will originate.

After a short address by the President of the Association the meeting was brought to a close.

Programme for To-night's Meeting.

Superintendents' conference, addressed by Rev. R. J. M. Glassford at Coleman's restaurant, commencing at 6 p.m., sharp.

Mass meeting commences at 8.45 p.m.

The special addresses at these meetings will be given by such prominent men as the Rev. R. A. Hiltz and the Rev. R. J. M. Glassford, and should prove of exceptional interest, as they are men who figure conspicuously in the forefront of the battle for moral improvement and spiritual uplift of the Sunday School.

15th Is The Date

WASHINGTON, D.C., MARCH 3. —It has just been announced from the White House that the extra session will be called on the 15th. This reflects the President's temper. The Republicans wanted at least a month in which to prepare for an extra session, if it is inevitable.

GIVEN OUTING

This being the Lenten season and a very appropriate time for charitable deeds was clearly evidenced last evening, when Chief Howard gathered together six or eight elderly ladies and took them for a sleigh drive. It is needless to say that the ladies thoroughly enjoyed the drive, for with such a pilot at the reins they all forgot, for a time, that they had nerves, and as a very suitable ending to such a pleasant event the Chief took the party to his home, where all partook of a sumptuous lunch prepared by Mrs. Howard. The party dispersed to their respective homes at the modest hour of 10.30 and all said nice things about their host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Howard.

How To Entertain The Visitors

Some two weeks ago the Examiner referred to the strenuous times they were having in the hockey world in Haliburton district. Apparently Haliburton is not the only section of the province where the game is played by the spectators as well as the teams on the ice. In the Trent Valley League, which comprises teams from Tweed, Marmora, Stirling and other villages in that district, the rivalry between Tweed and Marmora has reached a very high pitch, and it is rather interesting to learn of the manner in which a visiting team and its followers are entertained by the friends of the home club. For instance, the Marmora Herald in a recent issue gave an account of a game that was played in Tweed between the Marmora and Tweed teams, and which resulted in a victory for the former by a score of 7 to 2. The Herald in its account of the battle says:

As the Tweed Advocate laid such emphasis on the fact that Marmora would "Get a lesson in how to entertain visitors in a manner becoming." The crowd from here expected to be given just a lovely time, but apparently the Tweed idea of entertainment is very different to that of Marmora. There was a large crowd waiting at the station when the train arrived, and after indulging in some insulting remarks, this entertainment committee followed the visitors up town presenting them occasionally with a volley of snow balls as the first part of the lesson. However, this seemed to be only a preliminary, and during the game a fusilade was kept up, which furnished a certain amount of excitement, even though it was not very pleasant. Several from Marmora were hit on the face or head with hard snow balls which smarted a good deal at the time. Then after the game four boys from Marmora were pounced on by about thirty-seven of the rising generation of Tweed and kicked and hammered around until they ran from the hotel.

Of course there were other phases of the lesson, but they were along the same line, and all we hope is that not one from here will try to learn the lesson, even though they did "get" it good and plenty.

The Horse Races Of Years Ago

Occasionally a resident of a village, or for that matter a town, becomes reminiscent as he looks back on the good old days of long ago, and the local papers contain a review of the events that may have occurred in that particular neighbourhood in the days beyond recall. The Haliburton correspondent to the Minden Echo was in a reminiscent mood last week and in giving an account of a winter race meet that was held on Head Lake in that village, he recalled the race meets of some years ago, when people came from many towns and villages in the district to witness the events. He continues thus:

In looking through the vista of the past many of the old timers, I have little doubt, will recall to mind the races on Head Lake, when "Soapy Bob" enlivened the scene by auctioning off his envelopes. It was at this early date that the late Pat Conway's noted "Step-and-fetch-it," distinguished himself and surprised the hundreds of spectators by the speed with which he left F. O. P. in the rear. At that time hundreds of visitors were in evidence. They were here from the Bay of Quinte, Peterborough, Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls, Kinmount, Minden and other places. The hotels and public boarding houses were taxed to their utmost, in catering to the wants of their numerous guests.

It is true since then many changes have taken place in Provincial and Municipal Governments. We are now living under what may be termed "Local Option Rule." I ask the question, are things any better? In other words, has closing the bar lessened in any way the crime of intoxication? If it has there should be fewer signs, but greater signs, especially on Saturday nights and on Sundays. How long in this state of affairs likely to go on? It has been running along in this way since May 1st, 1910. At the races last week, or to be more correct, after the races, Tom, Dick and Harry, with Pat, Mike and Oliver, were all drunk. Query—Where did the whiskey come from to cause this shameful state of affairs in our local option municipality? Yes! Where did it come from? That is what we would like to know."

A Trip That Should Be Interesting

During the past year navigation has been closed between Hastings and Healey's Falls. This was due to the fact that a new concrete lock has been under construction at Hastings. It will, therefore, be pleasing news to excursionists, and owners of pleasure crafts, to know that the new lock at Hastings is about finished, and the work of swinging the gates will be undertaken in the course of a week or two. The new lock, which is located somewhat north of the old structure, which was built away back in the year 1837, is of the enlarged and improved class, and will undoubtedly outlive many generations.

The work on Canal construction at Hastings has been vigorously pushed forward by the contractors — Messrs. Randolph MacDonald Company, Limited, and great improvements are to be now seen at that point. However, the contractors still have considerable work to do—the principal item being the construction of a new concrete dam, and a large amount of dredging."

The opening of the new lock at Hastings this summer should afford an attractive route for excursionists. Not only is the work already completed at Hastings most interesting, but Healey's Falls is the scene of great activity. The contract for the work at this point—known as contract No. 6, was let almost a year ago to Messrs. Haney, Quinlan & Robertson, who are making splendid progress. A new concrete dam, and three locks are required to overcome the drop of 76 feet at Healey's Falls, and the work will necessitate a vast amount of rock cutting. When this contract is finished it will be possible to steam down to within a mile or so of Campbellford, as contract No. 5, which commences just below Healey's Falls, and which was let some few years ago to Brown & Aylmer, is about finished.

GAME INSPECTORS MAKE REPORTS

The Annual Report of the Game and Fisheries Department of the Ontario Government has been published. The Report contains some interesting information concerning the state of the fisheries of the Peterborough district. Observations made by a few of the observers are as follows:

Bewdley

Overseer A. J. Kent, of Bewdley, reports that the close season has been very well observed in his division, although he is convinced that a few fish were taken in close season out of Rice Lake. He is satisfied that if there were 25 overseers on that lake, a few fish would still be killed, as it seems impossible to stop the illegal fishing entirely. However, he is pleased to say that the entire lake was fairly well protected last spring during the spawning season. But the Otonabee River is the sore spot. Good men should patrol that river not only in the spring, but the entire year.

The fishing this summer was better than the previous one. Some very large fish were caught at the head of this lake—in fact no small ones. The run was from 9 to 24 pounds.

All the overseers on Rice Lake should work together harmoniously. That is the only way to give good protection to the fish, and if there is any illegal fishing going on in one division, and comes to the notice of an overseer from another division, he should immediately acquaint the overseer where such fishing is being done, and give him as much aid as he possibly can without neglecting his own division.

Re Game.—Muskrats were plentiful. He would recommend that each trapper pay a license of $2, and on the 1st of May state the number of muskrats that were caught by each license holder, and the number forwarded to the Department by the overseer of the division where said muskrats were trapped.

Ducks were very plentiful. The extra two weeks of close season was just the thing, but plover and snipe should have the same season as ducks. The duck hunters around Rice Lake are honourable men, no shooting done that he knows of until the season opened.

Partridge are getting more numerous. Quite a number have been shot this autumn. The black squirrels are also very numerous.

Fowlers' Corners.

Overseer J. R. Boate, of Fowler's Corners, reports that the fishing this season has been very good, bass and maskinonge veing very plentiful. The catch is mostly by local fishermen.

The game and fishery laws have been well observed, no violations having come to his notice. He would respectively suggest that the following amendments be added to the Game and Fisheries Act: That winter fishing through the ice or otherwise be not allowed; that mink be protected from the first of May till the first of January; and that muskrat be taken only in the month of April in each year.

Fur-bearing animals are getting scarce in that district, and not so many were taken as in previous years. Partridge are more plentiful than in the past, thanks to their protection, but he thinks they should be protected until 1912. Ducks have been very plentiful this season, and good shooting was the order of the day.

Lakehurst.

Overseer William Clarkson of Lakehurst, reports that the catch of bass and maskinonge was up to the average in his division, except in Sandy Lake. He would recommend that Sandy Lake be restocked with parent bass.

The tourist trade is increasing every year.

He sold one hundred and two permits this year. There was also a large number who secured their permits on their way there.

He also sold twenty guides' licenses.

The Fisheries Laws and Regulations were well observed; only two violations, both of catching fish in close season. The parties were both fined.

Mill owners gave no trouble during the season.

Duck, partridge and muskrats are plentiful. Apparently the deer are very scarce, just about one deer for every four hunters last season.

Gore's Landing.

Overseer J. R. McAllister, of Gore's Landing, reports that the law has been very well observed by every person. There have been a great many maskinonge taken, and large-mouthed bass, but the small-mouthed bass were not nearly so plentiful. There have not been so many non-residents fishing at Gore's Landing this season as last.

Ducks are very plentiful at the present time. Grouse are very scarce in that part of the Province, but black squirrels are getting to be very numerous. He would like to see the law made to forbid carrying guns on the lake, or on the shore shooting snipe, plover or rail, which birds are on the same grounds as the black and wood duck, until the open season for ducks, as it would make it a great deal easier for the overseer to enforce the law.

Keene.

Overseer A. W. McIntyre, of Keene, reports that there was a good catch of fish in his division (Rice Lake) this season—much better than last year, both for lunge and bass.

Ducks are very plentiful, and duck hunters are very well pleased with their sport, some shooting as high as forty per day. He thinks partridge are more plentiful, although there are not many around there. Muskrats were very scarce last season. Some trappers would like to have taken out licenses to trap rats. He has no infractions to report, as he thinks the law has been well observed.

Harwood.

Overseer W. H. Johnson of Harwood, reports that fishing has been excellent in Rice Lake this season. There were good catches and a great number of large ones from 15 to 23 lbs. Black bass fishing was very good in his district; and a large number were caught. There were not as many tourists this year as in former years. The water was not quite so high as in 1909, and in the spawning season the water fell very fast, and in consequence a lot of spawn and little fish perished. It is his opinion that the fish in Rice Lake are increasing in numbers.

The fishery laws have been fairly well observed. One instance of illegal fishing came to his notice. He gave chase to a party fishing, for about three miles, and would have succeeded in capturing them, but for a gasoline launch running up and taking them on. However, he telephoned to Capt. Hunter, and Capt. Carson of the patrol boat "Naiad," to come to his assistance, and was told by Capt. Carson that he had found out who the parties were, and would attend to them.

Muskrats are not as numerous as in former years. He would suggest that trapping be stopped the 15th or 20th April, as muskrats are being trapped too closely, and it would be a great help in increasing the numbers in future. It would also be a protection to fish in spawning season.

Ducks are quite plentiful. Partridge and black squirrels are increasing, he having seen more this year than for a number of years.

He has had a great deal of trouble keeping blinds cut down from the rice beds, but could not find who the parties were using them. He has also heard shooting on Sundays, and has made enquiries concerning same, but no one was able to give him any information.

Lakefield.

Overseer F. J. Moore of Lakefield, reports that during the past year the fishing laws have been fairly well observed in his district. He has had a few cases with some of the settlers, but let them off with a warning, which had good effect.

The past spring was the best for fish spawn they have had in this district for several years, for the reason that the water was kept up for several weeks, which gave the small fish a chance to get out of the marshes into deep water.

Tourists have had fairly good luck with rod and spoon this year, particularly bass fishing; maskinonge has not been so plentiful, particularly during the latter part of the season. He would strongly recommend that Stony Lake be restocked with parent bass if they could be got. He thinks it of great importance that the fish supply be kept up in these waters, as Stony Lake is fast becoming a great summer resort for tourists, who come from all parts of the United States, as well as from our own province. He does not think the fishermen would mind paying more for their permits if there was good fishing, as they seem delighted with our waters.

STOMACH DISTRESS IS ENDED FOREVER

Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Gas or Indigestion Vanish in Five Minutes

Take your sour, out-of-order stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh of Stomach; it doesn't matter — take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 50-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your former misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring; the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fulness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness or many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas, or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself in five minutes that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin.

Appreciation

1910 was a banner year with us, but 1911 carries even greater promise, because we have thousands of patients in this city and vicinity who are wearing glasses prescribed by us, many of whom could not be fitted elsewhere, and we know that they will not lose an opportunity of speaking a good word for us.

We take this occasion to acknowledge our indebtedness to our friends and patrons, our appreciation of their good will and faith in us, which have helped to make our success so great. We need not disguise the fact that we believe that we have deserved well of you. That if you have had confidence in us and have bestowed upon us your patronage it is because we have done something to warrant it. We have done "the best we could" and we purpose to keep right on doing so.

We are deeply grateful to our friends and customers for their loyalty. We ask for and hope to merit a continuance of the same.

BAD LUCK CAME THICK AND FAST

A Bank Clerk's Terrible Experiences While Lost in an Australian Forest

I had taken a holiday from my employment as a clerk in a Sydney bank, says John Coates, Dublin, and was spending it very agreeably with my friend, Mr. C. T. Stiles, New South Wales. Mr. Stiles had a large outlying station, Towamba, some forty miles distant, which was controlled by a manager, and I made a visit with him to this station, our intention being to remain a few days. On the day after our arrival, Mr. Stiles and his manager being engaged on some business accounts, I had a horse saddled and went off for a ride unaccompanied.

I was practically a "new chum," having been only a couple of years in Australia, and knowing nothing whatever of the bush. Of course it was carelessness on my part, but I simply rode out into the bush and got lost.

At first I was only a little amused, for I was within a dozen miles of the station, and I felt sure some of the men could find me easily. It became apparent, however, as darkness approached, that I was fated to spend the night in the bush. I had taken a hearty midday meal, and I was well supplied with tobacco and matches. I "hobbled" my horse with the throat-strap of the bridle and made a big fire under a ring-barked wattle and against its trunk. Then I lay down, with my pipe going well, and ultimately fell asleep, in spite of a storm which suddenly sprang up.

I awakened with a sensation that the end of the world had come, and it was some time before I realized what had happened. The tree against which I had made my fire, being partially burnt through and thereby weakened, had been blown down and had fallen across the upper part of my body. I was lying on my right side, and both my arms—the right one being underneath me—had been broken; the left one was broken, as I afterwards found, in three places. Three ribs were also broken on the left side. Of course I did not take stock of my injuries at the time.

The tree lay across my body, completely pinioning me. To add to the horror of the situation, I became aware that some of the burning sticks from the fire had been dashed against the lower part of my right thigh. My trousers and undergarments were quickly burned through, and I smelt the flesh burning. Then I became unconscious. How long I lay it is impossible to tell, but my next awakening was to a condition as frightful surely as any mind could conceive. A colony of ants, disturbed, perhaps, by the falling tree, were crawling over my face and had attacked my eyes. I screamed in my agony, but there was none to hear. I cannot tell how long I lay enduring torments which I can find no words to convey an idea of, but it must have been hours before I lapsed again into merciful unconsciousness.

It was on the morning of the fifth day that Mr. Stiles and his men found me. I was a raving madman, and of the finding I have no recollection whatever. It seems that I was taken to Bega, where, under the ministrations of Dr. Joseph Marshall, I came slowly back to this world again.

My left eye was completely destroyed and had to be removed; the right one came very, very near sharing its fate. I was totally blind when I regained my reason, and remained so for two months. My left arm had been amputated—it seems that it was quite shattered. My thigh had been horribly burnt, and I bear an enormous scar. All this happened twenty years ago, and to-day, although I am one-eyed and one-armed, I am a hale and vigorous man of fifty-five. My adventure gave me a horror of Australia, and I returned to Ireland when well enough to travel.

SOFT SHELLED EGGS

Experiments That Were Carried On at a Kansas Station

It is a general belief that soft-shelled eggs are due to a deficiency in the supply of lime to the laying hens. At the Kansas Experimental Poultry Farm, experiments were carried out to throw some light on the subject. It appears that hens subject to much nervous excitement are liable to lay soft-shelled eggs, due to nervous shock and analogous to abortion in other animals. It is known that on the ordinary diet a hen's system usually contains enough lime for the shells of five or six eggs. If lime is withheld, then, after laying five or six eggs, the hen will cease laying; but if lime in limited amounts be given the hen will lay eggs in proportion to that amount, though the shells on examination may prove to be somewhat thinner than usual. In addition to grit, lime must be supplied in the form of shell-grit or oysters. Old plaster is also very satisfactory.

FIVE THOUSAND WIVES WANTED FOR CANADA

But, According to Report, Fifty Thousand of England's Maidens and Widows will be Ready

At last the blow has fallen! says Tit-Bits. England is in the hands of the invader. But he seeks neither territory nor tribute. He courts no conflict with our brave men. All he asks—and we marvel at his modesty—is to take captive in flowery chains 5,000 (no fewer—and no more, at present) of our fair daughters, and to bear them away across the sea. And the tragic part of it is that the invader is actually being welcomed with open arms; and not 5,000 but 50,000 of England's maidens and widows will be ready, so it is said, to swell his retinue.

The crusades of old times are thrown completely into eclipse by this matrimonial crusade of the twentieth century. In our colonies across the great seas are scores of thousands of stalwart, industrious men, the hardy pioneers of civilization, on the far-flung frontiers of our Empire, who are clamoring for partners in their struggles and triumphs. They are hard-working, clean-living men, many of them destined to come to the front in the fight for fortune; but they lack the one thing needed to stimulate their ambition, to make the battle worth fighting—a wife.

Wives they must have. There are pathetically few available on the spot; and the world is being ransacked to find them. For some years past shipload after shipload of willing would-be brides has crossed the Atlantic. Not long ago the White Star liner Baltic cast anchor in New York Harbor with a thousand of them aboard—"the most picturesque cargo ever seen in the harbor," according to an enthusiastic reporter. Each damsel had donned her prettiest frock and her most alluring smile, ready and eager for her matrimonial fate. "I certainly want a husband," said pretty Nora O'Brien, of Limerick town. "I am told husbands are easy to get over here. I can cook, play the piano, scrub, milk cows, and do anything to make a man happy. Do you think a nice Canadian will take a fancy to me?"

When Clara Johnson, another of the fair cargo, was told that there would be thousands of offers for her hand, "The more the merrier," she laughed, gaily. "Let 'em all come!" Nora and Clara wore orange-blossom within a month of landing; and, it is said, of all the thousand maidens (there was quite a good sprinkling, too, of merry widows) almost everyone is to-day a happy wife, with a comfortable home and a devoted husband of her own.

And while the Baltic was unshipping her cargo of brides-to-be, two other ships, the Cedric and Cymric, were already on the Atlantic bringing 1,350 more eager candidates for the altar, all animated by the spirit of Kate Donohue, one of their number, who, in answer to a reporter's curious questioning, exclaimed, "Marry, indeed! Of course I will, and pretty quick, too! Why, that's what we have all come for!"

Tens of thousands of British maids have swelled this fair stream of emigration at Cupid's bidding; but the cry is still, "Send more—and more!" In Canada alone there are 50,000 men, many being University men and sons of good families, all of them steady, capable, energetic men of good character, who are calling aloud for wives. Five thousand are wanted at once, and the recruiting sergeants are busy as bees at this moment all over the country, finding and enlisting maids who would be brides.

ARE GETTING READY FOR THE CONFERENCE

Colonial Premiers Will Meet in London on May 22—Some Big Questions for Discussion

It is announced that arrangements have been made for opening the Imperial Conference on May 22, while the Imperial Education Conference will be held from April 25 to April 28. The former of these is, of course, incomparably the more important of the two, and will be at once the fifth of its kind and the first of a new series. These conferences, it may be recalled, began as Colonial Conferences, and bore the name of Conferences of Colonial Premiers. The first was held in 1887, advantage being taken of the presence in London of the Premiers for Queen Victoria's Jubilee. Similarly, the second took place at the Diamond Jubilee, and the third during the year of King Edward's Coronation. But at the third meeting a resolution was passed providing for a regular periodical assembling of the Conference, and the fourth was held in 1907. It is to be noticed that the Conferences have grown much smaller in numbers, owing to the consolidations that have taken place among the Colonies. In 1907 the Premiers attending came from Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Newfoundland, Cape Colony, Natal, and the Transvaal. Meanwhile the Union of South Africa has been formed, and General Botha will come this year as President of the Union of South Africa. Cape Colony, Natal, and Orange River State will lose their special representation, as did the Premiers of the States forming the Commonwealth of Australia. Newfoundland, therefore, is the only small colony which will have a representative of its own.

Early in 1909 Lord Crewe sent out letters to the various Governor-Generals and Governors, asking them to invite their Ministers to take into consideration the subjects which could profitably be discussed at this year's conference, and the various Dominion Governments are ready with their resolutions. For example, New Zealand's proposals include:

2.—The reconstruction of the Colonial Office;
3.—Extension of the powers of High Commissioners;
4.—Universal penny postage;
5. Development of telegraphic communication within the Empire;
6.—An All-Red mail route between England and Australia via Canada;
7.—An Imperial Court of Appeal, and
8.—Wider legislative powers for the over-seas Dominions with regard to shipping.

Australia appears to be specially interested in the establishment of an Imperial Court of Appeal, the regulation of emigration, and the Constitution of the Conference Secretariat, with which considerable dissatisfaction appears to prevail.

In addition to the above list of subjects, Imperial Defence is sure to be once more a prominent subject of discussion, and it is understood that no final decision will be taken by the Home Government as to the ratification of the much disputed Declaration of London until the Conference has had an opportunity of expressing its views.

TALK WITH MAKER OF GLASS EYES

Always Keeps a Quantity of Human Eyes on Hand—Black, Hazel, Blue and Grey

"I can make any kind of eye, one that will suit a girl's doll or her mamma, if she should ever be so unfortunate as to be in want of one," said a well-known glass-eye maker in London. "I do not do much in the way of birds' eyes, they are mostly manufactured in Birmingham, and, like the doll's eyes, do not require very special skill. It is where you have to match the natural eye with an artificial one so like it as to be practically indistinguishable that our special art comes in.

"I keep a good many 'human' eyes on hand, though frequently I am asked to make one to order. Here are two boxes, each containing about 200—black, hazel, blue, and grey. You will see the higher colors are of all shades, and scarcely one pair is exactly the same as another.

Sparkling Eyes for Ladies

"These are ladies eyes on your right. You will notice that they have more sparkle and brilliance than the gentlemen's. Here is a pair made to order, or rather I should say two, for they are, of course, intended for different ladies. They are both young and pleasing-looking, and no one will be able to tell that both their eyes are not perfectly natural. When a lady or gentleman comes to me for an eye I study closely the one they have left, the ball, the pupil, the exact shade of color. It is more important to them than sitting for their portrait to a Royal Academician.

"No, you cannot tell it is artificial, unless where the wearer cannot afford the price, and is content to buy what we call a misfit. These are, of course, much cheaper, but it is a rare chance if they match the other eye. And then they do not fit the socket exactly, as those do made to order, and they do not move in accordance with the movements of the natural eye. That is how they are so often detected. A perfectly-fitting eye is as responsive to the movements of the muscles as the natural eyeball. Even doctors, when not put on their guard, are frequently deceived, and I have more than one lady customer whose husbands believe their wives to be possessed of the orthodox number. In fact, both husband and wife might each have a glass eye and the other not know, but, I must say, I have never had such an instance in my experience.

Take Out Your Eye at Night

"It is wiser to take out the eye when retiring for the night. Many sleep with them under their pillow, others put them in a tumbler of water, while many don't take the trouble to remove them at all. They are not like false teeth, you know, ready to slip down the throat.

"Some people wear out false eyes faster than others do. I suppose it arises from a more active secretion of fluid in the socket. Yes; I suppose you may call it tears, but it need not be from crying only. The secretion acts on the false eye as acid does on metal, and the surface becomes corroded and roughened. The roughness leads to inflammation, and then the best thing they can do is to come to me for a new eye. Our sale of men's eyes is double that of women's. Men are more exposed to accident. An old maker, whom I knew when learning the trade, once supplied a lady with two eyes. She had lost one, and was so pleased with the artificial one provided that, when an unfortunate accident deprived her of the other, she had a second made to match it.

"False eyes, even the cheapest ones, are a great blessing to many servant girls. Without them they would never get a place. In Paris there is a charitable institution for supplying false eyes to the poor. A good eye can be had for a couple of guineas, but how few poor people can afford that. And the loss of an eye almost certainly involves the loss of a situation, with the greatest difficulty, or perhaps impossibility, of obtaining another."

SOME ANCIENT DOGS

It is impossible to say when dogs were first domesticated, but some of the earliest traces are found on Egyptian monuments, with figures of dogs, somewhat of the greyhound type, which date back to at least 3,500 B.C. Even in those remote days the dog was highly esteemed. Coming down a little later, we read that Ulysses, 3,000 years ago, was recognized by his dog Argus after his swineherd had failed to do so. Plutarch speaks of Alcibiades, who cut off the tail of his dog, and Myron, the sculptor, immortalized the animal by chiseling his image in marble. The Romans valued their dogs, and kept them for the chase and also as pets. Alexander the Great owned a veteran dog.

A RUSTIC FUNERAL

In compliance with his wish, the remains of John Long, a farm foreman at Rowley Hill, Saffron Walden, were borne to the grave in a farm wagon, drawn by four favorite horses. His employer and all the employes on the estate followed. Long had worked on the same farm and for the same family for 56 years, while among those who followed the coffin were six laborers who had been employed on the same estate between 37 and 47 years.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN.

Conditions of Employment and Living In B. C. Province.

"Undoubtedly there are excellent opportunities for the right type of female immigrant in British Columbia, but we have known of many disappointments owing to the ignorance of new arrivals as to the different conditions which prevail in the province, as compared with other parts of Canada, particularly in regard to domestic service." This statement was made during an interview which a representative of Canada had with Mrs. Pemberton, of Victoria, and the Rev. Canon Beanlands, who was for so many years a prominent resident of the Pacific province.

It was pointed out that, while the Chinaman is extensively employed in domestic service in British Columbia, the native-born Canadian girl almost invariably seeks work in an office, a store, or a school, being able to pick and choose an occupation which, because it would give her the greatest amount of leisure time in the evenings, seems most to her taste. Another point dwelt upon was that in the towns of Canada those families which are in a position to employ female domestic servants, expect service as such, and not as lady-helps. Frequently disappointment has been occasioned because the new-comer has been led to believe that she will be treated as "one of the family." In other cases, girls have gone out who have been employed in those large establishments which are so numerous in the Old Country, and of which there are so few in Canada—rich men's houses where a number of servants are kept, each one having some defined duty to perform, which has made her either incompetent or unwilling to discharge the duties of a "general" servant.

A common cause of mutual dissatisfaction between mistress and maid—in trivial matters almost amusing—is, however, the inadaptability of the newcomer to her different surroundings. Cases were quoted of girls who have always used this or that British polish, and could not be made to realize that a Canadian-made article—one with a name to which they were not accustomed—could perform the work. Occasionally, also, there is disappointment in the matter of wages, though as much as $15 a month may be paid to even the "raw" girl who really shows anxiety to learn and willingness to work. The opportunities for such a girl to rise and, frequently, to settle in a good home of her own, are, it was specially emphasized, much greater than in the older land.

In discussing the necessary expenditure as compared with earnings, as to which so much difference of opinion has been expressed, it was stated that in British Columbia, without doubt, clothing is about 50 per cent. more costly, and the making of dresses by local dressmakers is probably twice as dear as in England. Cotton goods and underwear are, however, not any more expensive, but sometimes cheaper, than "at home." "The general impression," said Canon Beanlands, "is, I think, strongly in favor of the higher wages as balanced against the higher price of commodities; there is a larger margin for saving or spending."

As regards openings for school teachers, typists, or stenographers, and shops or office workers of any kind, the local supply is considered quite adequate to the demand. Another point drawn attention to was the entirely different conditions existing in cities like Vancouver or Victoria from those in the country districts on the mainland or islands. Probably no province has so many people directly from the United Kingdom engaged in fruit-farming, ranching, etc., who would welcome the right sort of female help in their homes, and would value the addition to the family of those who could join socially as well as helpfully in their circle, in fact, be true "lady helps."

Those who desire more detailed information regarding the existing openings in British Columbia might communicate with the Secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association in Vancouver, in connection with which there is a committee which looks after new arrivals, and a hostel where a certain number can be boarded while arranging for a situation. The British Women's Emigration Society, which has its offices in the imperial insurance, London, will send out a personally conducted party of young women in March.

WHEN THE ODDS ARE AGAINST YOU

You Can Depend on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to Help You, If You Get the Genuine

What a fight goes on during the winter season against coughs and colds. The children are careless about keeping dry and warm, and the parents are worried to hear them cough.

So well-known is this medicine and so universally used that we need scarcely tell you of its merits. But we do want to warn you against imitations and substitutes.

Once you know that there are at least four imitations of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine on the market, you are not likely to let any dealer talk you into accepting anything but the genuine, on each bottle of which are the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book Author.

Imitations are sold on the reputation of this great medicine, and not on their own merits, or why should they not have a name of their own.

With the genuine Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine you can readily overcome croup, bronchitis, whooping cough, throat irritation and the most serious coughs and colds. 25 cents a bottle; family size 60 cents; all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

HIRAM CARPENTER'S WONDERFUL CURE OF SKIN DISEASE

After 20 Years of Intense Suffering.

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s. psoriasis, and others leprosy, commencing on my scalp; and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skilful doctors, is slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter is covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning these would be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs; feet badly swollen; toe-nails came off; finger-nails dead and hard as a bone; hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. O my God! how I did suffer.

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Marvelous! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got Cuticura Resolvent, Ointment and Soap. I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Cuticura Resolvent three times a day after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura Ointment morning and evening. Result: returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper. Hiram E. Carpenter, Henderson, N. Y."

"We hereby certify that we are acquainted with the aforesaid Hiram E. Carpenter, and know his condition to have been as stated. We believe his statement to be true in every particular." L. B. Simmons & Son, Merchants; G. A. Thompson, Merchant; A. A. Davis; Millard E. Joiner, Merchant; John Carpenter; A. M. Ledingwell, Attorney and Counselor-at-law, all of Henderson, N. Y.

The above remarkable testimonial was written January 10, 1900, and is republished because of the permanency of the cure. Under date of April 22, 1910, Mr. Carpenter wrote from his present home, 610 Walnut St. So., Lansing, Mich.: "I have never suffered a return of the psoriasis and although many years have passed I have not forgotten the terrible suffering I endured before using the Cuticura Remedies."

Since this cure was made by the Cuticura Remedies, they have made their way to every part of the civilized world. A 32-page booklet describing humors and affections of the skin will be mailed free to those desiring further information by the Potter Drug & Chemical Corporation, Boston, U. S. A.

Another Cause of Alarm.

As showing the interest people take in the dead languages and the mottoes written therein, instance the following story:

"This town is getting more French every day," said a member at a recent meeting of the Montreal Branch Knights of Pythias.

Naturally this started an argument.

"I tell you there won't be any French spoken at all in forty years," said a brother.

"You're wrong," replied the first speaker. "The place is getting more and more French. Why they have gone and changed the name of the square between the City Hall and the Court House. Think of giving that a French name."

"They haven't," said a Pythian.

"Yes they have," stated the man who started the argument. "They've got it labelled 'Concordia Salus.'"

Where He Went.

One of the leaders of the New Brunswick Bar was once cross-examining a female plaintiff who claimed to have been falsely imprisoned for certain taxes.

"What did you tell the collector when he demanded the tax?" he asked.

"To go to the devil," was the reply.

"Did he go?" queried the attorney.

"I don't know; he went and employed you."

Didn't Understand French.

Mrs. Granger—Silas, I saw a beautiful French clock in the jeweler's window when I was in town today. I do wish you would buy it for my Christmas present.

Granger—Now, Mandy, there ain't no use of wasting good money on a French clock. Neither of us understands French, and we'd never be able to tell what time it was by the thing.—Chicago News.

Making the King's Bed.

Among the duties of the position of the guard in the olden times was the singular one of making the king's bed every night and searching it for any dangerous weapon that might be concealed therein to the detriment of his majesty's sacred person. First one of these stalwart soldiers had "to fumble up and down" the mattress. Then "the esquire for the body" took the sheets and rolled them on his arm or "stripped" them through his hands. Whenever the yeomen touched the bedclothes they had to make the sign of the cross and kiss the place, which must have rather prolonged the ceremony! Finally, when the bed had been made, with much quaint but interminable "ritual," the said esquire sprinkled it with holy water, and then the martial bedmakers retired to a supper provided for them "without the traverse"—i. e., across the corridor.

Henry VIII. greatly embellished the yeomen's costume and presented them with cloth of gold horse clothe valued at £5 a yard. His first queen, Katherine of Aragon, by the way, had a bodyguard all to herself, which, after her divorce, passed into the service of Anne Boleyn.—Richard Davey's "The Tower of London."

Willing to Be Martyrs.

Some years ago a French tradesman stated that he wished to be guillotined instead of a murderer who had been condemned to death. Of course the authorities declined to do as he wished, and he went away vowing that he would give his life for some one else later on.

A Russian peasant who was noted for his quiet piety offered to be shot in order to save a revolutionary who was awaiting the carrying out of the death penalty. This, he said, was not done out of any sympathy for the accused, but merely to show his disapproval of the principle of taking lives of criminals.

Probably the most extraordinary case on record was that of a Quebec citizen who passed himself off as a murderer for whom the police were searching. When the matter was investigated it was found that the self accused man had nothing whatever to do with the crime. "No," he said, "you're right. I'm not the murderer, but my wife leads me such a miserable life at home that I thought I would escape from matrimonial wretchedness by getting the government to hang me."—Pearson's.

Queen Elizabeth and Her Portraits.

The modern grievance of the illustrious against the photographer of the halfpenny paper has a parallel as far back as the early part of Queen Elizabeth's reign, when her minister, Cecil, issued a proclamation against the circulation of ill favored likenesses of her majesty. It stated that, as her majesty had perceived "a great number of her loving subjects to be much grieved with the errors and deformities" displayed in many popular portraits of herself, she had been pleased, "being herein, as it were, overcome with the continual requests of so many of her nobility and lords, to command that some cunning person should shortly make a portrait of her person or visage to be participated to others for the comfort of her loving subjects."

Scottish Names.

No country has experienced the difficulty arising from the commonness of one surname in a district more intensely than Scotland. With a whole countryside populated by Campbells, Frasers or Gordons, some more distinguishing nomenclature had to be found. And no doubt this was the chief reason why at one time men were always known by the name of their estate or farm. Dean Ramsay remembered an old cowherd who was always known as Boggy. His real name was Sandy Anderson, but he had once owned a wretched farm called Boggendreep, and he was Boggy to the day of his death.

The X Ray.

The X ray, so called, was discovered on Oct. 8, 1895, by Professor W. C. Roentgen. The professor was experimenting with a Crookes vacuum tube, electrically excited, and enveloped in a black covering, when he noticed that some of the rays proceeding from the tube passed through the black paper and affected a fluorescent screen some two or three yards away. In such wise did his great discovery come to him, when he was least expecting it.

Could Not Walk Ten Yards Without Resting.

WEAK HEART WAS THE CAUSE.

Mrs. Robinson Collette, Rogersville, N.B., writes: "I am now enjoying the best of health after having used your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I was troubled with a weak heart and was afraid to draw a long breath for the pain it would cause me. I could not sleep at night, and it was impossible for me to walk ten yards without resting myself. I cannot speak too highly of your Heart and Nerve Pills, for they are the greatest pill I have ever used and I can recommend them to all sufferers."

Thousands of people go about their daily work on the verge of death and yet do not know it.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart for the simple reason that one thinks it will right itself, but here is where the mistake is made. It is only when a violent shock comes that the weakness of the heart becomes apparent.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a quick and permanent cure.

50c. Bottle FREE

Read the Reasons for this Offer, so Vitally Important to the Sick:

Psychine is the greatest vitality builder of the age.

For thirty years Psychine has been curing almost every disease that is due to run-down vitality.

Hundreds of thousands have used Psychine with wonderful beneficial results.

We have received thousands of unsolicited testimonials from people whom Psychine has cured, of in many cases, hopeless ailments.

There are still thousands of people suffering from disease, however, whom Psychine can benefit.

There are still thousands who are trying to cure themselves by wrong methods, who are using dangerous and hurtful medicines.

There are still thousands who are gradually losing their vitality—from whose body the necessary resisting power to disease is slowly but surely slipping away.

There are still those who soon will hear the dread "call in the night" if they do not take prompt action.

To these we have the above message, viz.:

"Let us buy a 50-cent bottle of Psychine from your druggist and give it to you, free, to prove its great value."

That 50-cent bottle of Psychine will tell you more powerfully than mere words can how tremendously beneficial Psychine will be for you.

It will give you an unmistakable indication of its wonderful power to renew the bodily vitality, to strengthen the phagocytes (the white corpuscles), the policemen or scavengers of the body.

The Surgical Department of the Japanese Army, in the Japo-Russian war, first drew the attention of the scientific world to the function of the white corpuscles of the blood or phagocytes.

Foreign medical men were astounded to see Japanese soldiers with wounds that had not been cleansed or dressed for days, that were apparently dirty, ill-kept, and altogether unsanitary.

Yet these dirty wounds healed marvellously; no army the world had ever known had such a wonderful record for the recovery of their wounded as the Japanese army.

There are two kinds of corpuscles in your blood, you know, red and white.

The red carry nutrition, the white are the policemen or scavengers of the body.

Whenever a disease germ enters the body, these white corpuscles attack and literally eat it.

A wound that attracts disease germs from the air is cleansed and healed by billions of phagocytes, or white corpuscles, devouring these unwelcome disease germs.

Any disease can be cured by these white corpuscles if they be in sufficient number or strong enough to attack and devour the germs that cause the disease.

If they are not in sufficient numbers or strength, then the disease germs eat them and disease claims the body.

That's the cause of every disease to which humanity is heir.

For centuries the cure of disease has been by means of herbs—nature's remedies.

It is only within recent times that we have come to know how these herbs act.

Now scientists tell us they increase the strength and numbers of the white corpuscles or phagocytes.

In Psychine we have some of the most healing and beneficial herbs in the world, herbs that increase and strengthen the white corpuscles.

From Arabia comes one herb, from South America another, China and Japan produce a third, while the jungle of India yields a fourth.

All these herbs are recognized by the medical profession as being the most beneficial to health that they know.

That's why Psychine, in the third of a century it has been made, has cured hundreds of thousands of people who suffered from the following diseases:

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Weak Lungs	Weak Voice
Hemorrhages	Weak Memory
Sore Throat	Nervous Diseases
Asthma	Catarrhal Affections

What Do You Think of This?

How often we hear men say, "Yes, I'd insure my life if I was only sure I could keep it up. I could pay it alright as long as I had my health, but if sickness or accident laid me low I would have to give it up and lose the protection just at the time I needed it most." Now, the issues a policy just to suit such a case. Under this policy, should the assured become totally and permanently disabled from any cause, the policy is kept in force during such disability, without any lien or charge against it. Or, in lieu of this, the Company will commence forthwith to pay to the assured one twentieth of the policy each year for twenty years. Should the assured die before the twenty annual payments have been paid, the remaining instalments will be paid to such beneficiary as the assured may designate.

Assurance Company of Canada

Is not this the Climax of Liberality? The Sun Life lives up to its motto of "Prosperous and Progressive." Investigate this proposition before insuring.

Coronation Hymns Receive Approval of the Rulers

New Verse for the National Anthem of Britain Is Written by Mr. Martin S. Skeffington—Description of the Robe King George Will Wear.

MANY WEDDINGS ARE SET FOR THE GALA DAY

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

WITH the coronation day drawing nearer attention is being more and more directed to the public arrangements in connection with the ceremony. One of the latest announcements which has caused great interest is that a set of coronation hymns published by Messrs. Skeffington has been submitted to the King and Queen and been approved by them.

With England's Crown to-day
We hail our King, and pray
God save the King!
Guide him in happiness,
Guard him in storm and stress,
Then in Thy kingdom bless
And crown our King!

Other hymns are "Now Thank Ye All Our God," "Praise the Lord, Ye Heavens Adore Him," "Rejoice To-Day With One Accord" and "O God of Jacob, by Whose Hand."

Another of the coronation hymns by the Bishop of Durham has for its opening verse:—

Lo, the King in state and splendor
Wears the Crown upon his brow;
Chiefs and princes homage render,
Kneeling for the knightly vow;
Lord of Lord, be his Defender
save him ever, save him now.

The first verse of another hymn written specially by Dean Robinson, also in the collection, runs thus:—

The King, O Lord, in Thee this day rejoices,
Glad in the grace of Thy abundance poured;
Round him the People with ten thousand voices
Loudly acclaim th' Anointed of the Lord;
His heart's desire by Thee is given,
His kingly state is sealed in Heaven.

The Royal Robe.

The announcement that the King is to use, at his coronation the imperial mantle worn by George IV. and not that worn by King Edward in 1902 has aroused much interest, and in this connection it is notable that custom formerly ordained, in return for various services rendered in and after the coronation ceremony, that certain of the vestments and appurtenances passed by way of fee into the possession of those who performed them. Thus the Duke of Norfolk, as Earl of Arundel and Lord of the Manor of Worksop, executed the office of Chief Butler of England at the banquet which followed the Coronation of George V., receiving a gold basin and ewer as his fee.

The Lord Mayor presented to His Majesty wine in a cup of gold, and the King, having partaken of it, returned the gold cup to the city's Chief Magistrate by way of reward. The Lord of the Manor of Nether Wilmington, presented to the King three maple cups, which His Majesty handed to the Mayor of Oxford by way of payment for the bowl of wine he had been privileged to offer the Monarch.

It was in this manner that the magnificent mantle of George IV. passed into the possession of the Lord Great Chamberlain. The Master of the Robes having delivered it into the hands of the officiating Dean, the King was vested in it, and the Lord Great Chamberlain fastened the clasps, for which duty the mantle became his ancient possession.

The mantle in question, which is a splendid specimen of the weaver's art, passed into private hands, and has now been offered to King George V., who has accepted the unique gift. It is of the finest cloth of gold and is surrounded by a deep fringe of pure gold threads. Woven into its surface are the badges of the three kingdoms of England, Scotland and Ireland. It differs from that worn by King Edward, which was made of four breadths of yellow cloth of gold, woven with the rose, the thistle and the shamrock, and wrought with silver eagles.

Coronation Theatricals.

Preparations for the coronation theatrical season are also well in hand. All the West End houses of entertainment will be occupied during June and July. Managers are looking out for a really great success that will carry them right through the coronation season, and the hope is that a piece that is successful in May will be doubly successful during June and July. This means a year of long runs, which, while the London playgoer may grumble, will be pleasing to the many thousands of visitors for the coronation.

The hope of the London playgoer, therefore, lies in the production of gala performance and special coronation matinees, and the managers have decided to give plenty of these. Coronation programmes and command and gala performances have already been arranged at four theatres.

So great is the demand for theatres during the coronation season that many well known managers experience no little difficulty in procuring houses. Among them are Miss Marie Tempest, Miss Lena Ashwell, whose theatre, the Kingsway, is let to another; Mr. Frederick Whelan and Messrs. Vedrenne and Eadie.

Preparations for the coronation yachting season, too, are progressing well, and three Kings are to take part in the races that have been arranged in honor of the coronation of England's sailor king. The time and place of the muster have been arranged for Spithead on August 7 and 8, and even at this early stage there is the assurance of a fleet of racing craft such as never before has been seen in English waters.

The yacht, after the queen of the more formal coronation fixtures, be able to join the fleet in the old Britannia, the racing cutter in which his father when Prince of Wales led the British racing fleet around the coast.

The German Emperor will take an even more active part in the sport. His flag will be in the fighting line, flying over his fine schooner, Meteor III., which was regarded as the world's finest racing schooner until the arrival of Mr. A. S. Cochran's Westward last year to show that the American designer, Herreshoff, had still more than a word to say in the construction of fast schooners. On this occasion the competition will be further sharpened by the appearance of another racer for the same class, designed by Fife, of Fairlie, who was responsible for the lines of Shamrocks I. and III.

His Majesty King Alfonso of Spain is another royal participant in the sport. His cutter, the Hispania, built last year to designs by Fife, has been but little seen in British waters, but the form which she displayed on her appearances is such as to suggest that much may be expected of her even in the strong class in which she will be entered. There was a hope that Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock would be seen among the starters, but as there was no promise of adequate opposition in first class cutters no more toward fitting her out has yet been made, and the hope grows less as the weeks go past.

There will be two days' racing and matches will be provided for every class in existence.

Coronation Weddings.

Among other things for which the coming season will be notable is the rush of fashionable marriages. The number of coronation brides in prospect already exceeds, it is said, the crowd of matrimonial aspirants that made the spring and early summer of King Edward's coronation year a memorable marriage season.

There seems to be in the minds of thousands of engaged girls an inscrutable association of ideas which naturally suggest the felicity of assuming the crown of wifehood coincident with the crowning of the King and Queen. At any rate, the orders already reaching the hands of tradesmen who have much to do with weddings indicate the likelihood of a record matrimonial season, and florists, modistes, decorators, caterers and wedding cake makers are all rubbing their hands in gleeful anticipation of a remarkably busy period.

Not only is it in London, and the West End particularly, that coronation bridals will be a feature of the year but throughout the provinces and even the whole Empire. From Ceylon to British Columbia, all the girls seem bent on being married by the time King George is crowned, and London wholesalers in wedding commodities, from cards to cakes, are already experiencing the first evidences of the rush.

Wedding outfits in scores are intended for India, where the smart brides of military and civil circles are eagerly expectant of the gayeties of the coronation durbar, and in view of the King's visit orders are being placed in London for the smartest fashionable toilets.

'TOM BROWN' HALE; ALSO THE 'SLOGGER'

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

THE two heroes of the fight between Tom Brown and Slogger Williams, which, as described by the late Dr. Hughes, stirred our pulses when we were young, are still alive, hale and strong. "Tom" is the Rev. Chancellor O. Jones, who celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday last week, and the other is the Rev. Augustus Orlebar, of Willington, Bedfordshire, who, though an octogenarian, is still actively at work in the cure of souls.

Mr. Orlebar, who entered the lowest form at Rugby in 1833, when the famous Dr. Arnold was in his prime, was full of reminiscences of life at the old school when seen by a reporter in his rectory library a few days ago.

"No man who was at Rugby in my day," he said, "knows what it is to feel the cold. We got inured to it there.

"A fire at each end of a long corridor was supposed to heat the row of studies that lay between.

"Early roll call by candle light in winter was a fitting preparation for an Arctic journey. At first, however, boys used to sweat before they became accustomed to it."

To Mr. Orlebar, as to all old boys of his day, Arnold was Rugby and Rugby was Arnold.

"Hughes gives a better picture of him as a personality than Stanley," he said. "I can still see his strong, athletic figure and fine head as he walked with great strides beside the pony carriage in which Mrs. Arnold, who was an invalid, used to ride.

"At the end of my last term Dr. Arnold was strong and vigorous when he said goodby to me the day before I went up to play for the eleven in the standing fixture against Marylebone.

"Just when the match was over the news began to spread through the field that the Doctor was dead."

Mr. Orlebar was the boy who, in the Marylebone match described in "Tom Brown," at cover point caught out the famous Marylebone, and so turned the tide in favor of Rugby. Even now Mr. Orlebar cannot talk of cricket ... without shedding tears as a tribute to his memory.

THE CHARLTON QUARANTINE KENNELS AT SHOOTER'S HILL, KENT

Animals Kept in Comfortable Quarters and Trained Keepers Give Them Excellent Care—Institution Maintained by Government in Effort to Stamp Out Hydrophobia—Animals Are Quarantined Six Months, but Nobody Objects Except Owners.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

ALTHOUGH there are many people interested in dogs who still have a great antipathy to the canine quarantine stations adopted by the Board of Agriculture some years ago for the suppression of hydrophobia, there are numerous others who believe in them, and they will point out the fine work the Board of Agriculture has done in practically stamping out the malady.

Chief exception to these quarantine stations is taken by society people and others who travel, for it precludes them from the company of their pets when going abroad. Dogs can go out of the country all right, but it is on their return that the trouble occurs, for so sure as they come back again they will have to go in exile at one of these stations for a period of three months. Then, again, there are people who would often make a dog bargain abroad, but will not do so for the reason that they know their purchases will have to be quarantined for six months, and they will not take what they think is a risk.

One of the nearest of these institutions to town is the Charlton Quarantine Kennel, at Shooter's Hill, Kent, owned by Dyer & Co. Mr. "Jack" Gibbs, the head kennelman, vouchsafed some interesting particulars concerning the kennels and their inmates.

"In the first place," said Mr. Gibbs as we walked through toward the fine ranges of kennels, "this is not only a quarantine station, but it also is a boarding establishment for dogs. For instance, these two dogs," pointing to two splendidly grown Newfoundland puppies which stood gleefully wagging their tails at the gate of a paddock in which they had been romping, "are boarders, and," indicating a row of kennels with a wave of his hand in which several varieties of dogs were enclosed, "so are they. We not only board dogs here, but we 'vet' them and condition them for exhibition; in fact, we do everything that is required."

"But what about the animals in quarantine? Where are they?" queried the correspondent.

"Oh, they are over there," and, crossing some grass plots and passing through several gates, we eventually came to them. In appearance they are exactly the same as those in which the "boarders" were penned, and just as comfortable in every way, the only difference, perhaps, being that they were much more roomy.

"We have not a great number here just now," said Mr. Gibbs, "but now and again the capacity of these kennels is very severely taxed and sometimes we have some very fine dogs here. Only yesterday I noticed at Croft's Show a Great Dane and a Pomeranian which had been through quarantine at this establishment, and I was pleased to see that both were among the prize winners.

"There are some 'Poms' here now, but I am afraid they are hardly up to show form. This one belongs to Lady Hardinge. Its time is nearly up now."

The next introduction was to Jack, a wire haired fox terrier not unlike the late King Edward's Caesar. Jack's manners, however, are not to be compared with the noble animal which was so fondly attached to its royal master, for immediately Jack was let out for a run he started issuing challenges to the other dogs to fight, and no doubt would have engaged some of them in combat had it not been for the fact that two rows of strong iron railings prevented him from following them. Jack belongs to Captain A. Cleveland Smith, of the Pelican, one of the Hudson Bay Company's boats.

Next a curious looking animal belonging to Mrs. Jean Barrett, an American variety actress now in England, was shown. It is called an Angora fox dog, and is something like a half bred collie, except that it is all white with the exception of a lemon marking on each ear. It has lovely eyes, similar to amethyst in color, and they have a very kind expression. "Mrs. Barrett is greatly attached to this dog," remarked the kennel man, "and often comes down here to see it. You ought to see the fuss when she does."

He Was Unfriendly.

We did not stay long at the next pen, which contained a Samoyede belonging to Lieutenant J. B. Adams and which took part in the last Nimrod Antarctic expedition, for this animal curled up his "Dudley" nose and showed his teeth ominously, but Adrian, a pointer which has lately come from Florida, was pleased to see us.

"This animal, I am told," said Mr. Gibbs, "is one of the best retrieving pointers in the world. I have that on the authority of Mr. W. Arkwright, of Cheshire, one of the greatest pointer men in England. It is not often that a pointer retrieves, but this dog, according to Mr. Arkwright, does both to perfection."

"See this one?" queried Mr. Gibbs, indicating a half bred collie. "Not much to look at, is he? He belongs to Mr. J. H. Grube, of California, who is over in Germany spending a holiday with his sister. Mr. Grube thinks the world of it. He says it killed a wolf which had caused great depredation among his sheep.

"Here is another American dog, Cricket, a half bred Boston terrier, which belongs to a Mr. Pershouse, and again another collie, Nellie, owned by Mrs. Secof, of Paris, and a Dachshund. This latter is the property of Lady Ashby St. Ledgers, who is now in India. Her ladyship wanted to take it with her and would have done so, the reason she didn't, I believe, being that the P. and O. Steamship Company won't carry dogs."

Last, but by no means least, of the interesting collection was Jimmy, a tiny little cropped terrier belonging to a Mrs. P. Vansittart, who Mr. Gibbs believed was an American woman. Jimmy is a diminutive puppy of about three pounds in weight, very much resembling a smooth Griffon in appearance. If his antics were anything to go by he did not mind being quarantined in the least, for he was as lively as he possibly could be.

WOMEN WHO DRINK HIDE THE SECRET

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

DR. R. MURRAY LESLIE, in the current number of National Health, makes the startling assertion that there is far more secret drinking among upper and middle class women than is generally known. The consumption of whiskey, brandy, and even eau de Cologne is far too common. In the industrial centres, this Harley street physician points out, women are drinking more than ever. In London, Glasgow and Dublin the public houses may be seen crowded with women and the Irish capital is notorious for the large number of quite young girls frequenting public bars.

On the other hand, when a woman of the upper classes becomes addicted to alcohol she nearly always drinks in secret.

She soon becomes such an adept in cunning and dissimulation that she is often enabled to carry on the practice for years without any of her friends being aware of the fact.

OLD NAVAL HEADS "STUDENTS" AGAIN

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

FIFTEEN rear admirals, captains and commanders in the royal navy are taking a course in advanced gunnery and signalling at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, and for three hours each day these middle aged to venerable men, covered with gold lace, sit listening with rapt attention to the teachings of round, smooth faced lieutenants, their juniors in service but seniors to knowledge of the particular branches of war work. This class is the outcome of one of the reforms introduced by Lord Fisher (affectionately called Jackie) when he was first sea lord.

Progress in naval science has been so rapid in late years that senior officers have found it impossible to keep up with the improvements made in some of the technical departments of a warship.

The Admiralty, therefore, decided to establish special instructional courses. In all Masters of the subjects will be gunnery and signals, and for three weeks from March 6 the use of torpedoes will be ... upon which the chubby faced ... seniors [illegible].

Among the officers who are attending the class are Rear Admiral Sir Colin Keppel, K.C.B., Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, G.C.B., Admiral Sir Frederick Tufnell, K.C.B., Vice Admiral ... of H.M.S. Dreadnought, H. L. Tottenham, R.N. For the ... course, opening March 6, ... will [illegible] ... and [illegible] ... will represent officers of flotillas ... and battleships.

MAVIS' LITTLE DOG LIKE MARY'S LAMB

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

THE legend of Mary's little lamb, whose fleece was as white as snow, and everywhere that Mary went the lamb was sure to go, has been immortalized in nursery ballads enough following its mistress to school one day, has been beaten in Hinton, a mountain terrier, who has accompanied his little mistress, Miss Mavis Lane, of Maidenhead, to school daily for nearly a year. "Father, you remember when I was a baby," said Miss Lane, "and he always used to lie under my cradle. When I went to High Wycombe Blinker went with me to school three days regularly for some years. He came right into the school with me and lie at my feet while we had lessons.

"At playtime he came out and joined me and the other girls. Everybody got to know him at the school, and several attempts were made to take his photograph in the playground, but each time he saw the camera he broke the string he was being held by and hurried over to me.

He seems to understand every word I say. He has grown much bigger and can look after himself better. In addition to the unexpired record of school attendance Blinker has also won the ... [illegible] ... that made Harriet famous.

EXCOMMUNICATION POPE'S VERDICT ON "OLD CATHOLICS"

"Bishop" Mathew, Self-Styled Earl of Landaff, Under Church Ban.

PHILADELPHIA TO BE MADE TWO DIOCESES

Before Choosing Archbishop Ryan's Successor Episcopal Territory Will Be Split Up.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

ROME, Saturday.—The nomination of a successor to the late Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, already has begun to excite interest in Rome, although the matter will not come formally before the Consistorial Congregation for two months.

Before then it is most probable that the congregation will divide the archdiocese by the formation of a new diocese, with its centre at Reading. The authorities here have discussed such a scheme for the last two years, but decided to defer the division while Archbishop Ryan was alive.

For the first time in centuries the Pope this week excommunicated by name three Bishops, Arnold Harris Mathew, Herbert Ignatius Beale and Arthur William Hewarth.

The first named received his episcopal consecration some years ago from a Jansenist Bishop and then took the title of Anglo-Catholic Archbishop of London, as head of the Old Catholic Church of England. The others up to last summer were priests of the Nottingham diocese.

Years ago they were nominated prelates by Leo XIII. through a mistake. They were almost immediately deprived of this dignity, but later were reinstated in their respective parishes by Bishop Brindle, of Nottingham. They then approached "Bishop" Mathew, inducing him to consecrate them independent bishops. The three advised the Pope of what had been done. Catholics in England were surprised and Rome was silent.

Meanwhile the Holy Office was examining the case as it is very scrupulous to obtain all the evidence before reaching a decision. Last week Mgr. Lugari, assessor of the Holy Office, submitted to Pope Pius the results of the investigation and the Pope, by motu proprio, has now publicly excommunicated the three "Bishops" and all who took part in the consecration.

The question of the validity of the consecration is not mentioned in the papal document, but certainly it will never be recognised by Rome. If the "Bishops" return to their allegiance they will not be permitted to exercise episcopal functions.

On Thursday last, for the first time since his indisposition, the Pope gave private audiences to others than cardinals and bishops. The first lay persons admitted were Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Murphy, of New York, who came to Rome with a letter from Cardinal Gibbons. They found the Pope cheerful and active, though somewhat pale. His physician says that his constitution is thoroughly sound and that there is no reason why he should not live many years.

The newspapers continue to discuss bitterly the probable decision of the Kaiser not to visit Rome for the cinquantenary, ascribing it to opposition on the part of the Vatican. As a matter of fact, the subject never has been submitted to the Papal Secretariat of State. On the other hand, the Holy See has decided not to hold any solemn functions this year. Among such are royal receptions of the Vatican. The Kaiser has not received any invitation to Rome or any intimation that his visit would be welcomed.

SQUALL FROM NEW NEWSPAPER BABY

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

ANOTHER daily illustrated publication has made its bow to the English public, and this publication, which was born in the steel city, Sheffield, signalises its entrance into the journalistic world by attacking American newspapers.

"In America," says the Picture Paper, which is the name chosen by this squalling journalistic baby, "the criers of false news are the editors and they are appointed for getting 'scoops.' Over here the crier is the newsvendor, and we reward him by casting him into prison. And this suggests many pleasant reflections on the state of morality in the two countries.

"The old gibe that American dry goods meant American novels had some truth in it to give it sting, but no one has ever accused the American newspaper of being dry, and this is largely because in that happy land the journalist (to change the figure) does not wear the hobble skirt of reality, but runs freely on his course untrammelled by any sordid obligations to maintain a definite relation between his news and the facts.

"You will understand how cute this criticism is when you are told that the critic is a representative of the type of English newspaper which stops at nothing to get illustrations. The 'camera fiend,' who is the most important member of the staff, follows you and never lets go—from the cradle to the grave. There is a flash and the pungent odor of powder as your sponsor holds you over the baptismal font, 'bang' and you are 'snapped' as you are placing the ring on the finger of the girl you love, once more 'bang' and you are taken from the vantage point of a tram or stepladder as you are resting in Southcliffe, before your are laid away forever.

"It is simple cute to say that there are many other newspapers in England, and ... there are the illustrated ... [illegible] ... to do the work ... in cycles that "His Lordship can't be seen."

PICTURESQUE LIFE OF DUBLIN'S NEW LORD MAYOR

Mr. Farrell, Emoluments Cut, Threatened to Close the Mansion House.

ONCE INSURANCE MAN, NOW A NEWSDEALER

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

DUBLIN, Saturday.—From the humblest circumstances to the Lord Mayor of Dublin is the record of John J. Farrell, who shortly takes up the position of chief magistrate of the city. Were it not for unsettled politics he might possibly terminate his year of office as Sir John J. Farrell, for in a coronation year, and with the King and Queen coming to Ireland in July, it goes without saying that knighthoods and even baronetcies will go to the loyal executives of the chief Irish cities.

Mr. Farrell, however, whose salary, by the way, was cut by the corporation from £10,000 to £8,000 yearly, is not "loyal" in the sense of the term which applies to Ulster, and the Dublin corporation as at present composed does not vote loyal addresses to royalty, though with a promise of home rule next year there is no knowing what may happen when King George visits Ireland.

Is a News Dealer Now.

The incoming Mayor has held minor office, in the corporation, was at one time an insurance agent and at present is a newsdealer in Talbot street. As the "big-wigs" have cut his salary he will not transfer his residence to the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor's official abode, but will continue to live in a modest suburban home. In fact, Mr. Farrell threatens to bang, bar and bolt the doors of the Mansion House.

"Yes," said the Lord Mayor-elect to your correspondent, speaking of his selection for the office, "it is a position of the greatest honor, and one that any man might be proud of. In fact, in our present state, without a Parliament of our own, the office places me in a position somewhat between your President and the Mayor of Greater New York, though, of course, I need hardly say, without the power of either. We have no Crown (apparently the Lord Mayor had not read Mr. Redmond's speech), no President of a republic, therefore the Lord Mayor of Ireland's capital represents the State so far as we Irishmen are concerned."

First Citizen of Ireland.

"You may not be aware," proceeded Mr. Farrell, "that according to statute law Dublin is the only city which has the privilege of presenting a petition in state at the bar of the House of Commons, and that according to British charters the Lord Mayor of Dublin is the first citizen of Ireland in the absence of the King, unless it be the Lord Lieutenant when he is presiding at the Privy Council. At all other times, the Lord Mayor is by statute the first citizen and next to the King."

Questioned as to the coming royal visit Mr. Farrell said:—

"The people of Ireland are disposed to be friendly toward King George. They were fond of his father, King Edward, and if home rule were granted would give King George an official welcome. The people of Great Britain are beginning to understand Ireland better and for this we have in a large measure to thank the United States, which has shown unvarying good will for Ireland. Even a friendly smile from the great Republic has been of great value to poor little Ireland. The United States have been to us our sheet anchor in distress and we are grateful. 'Long live the United States,' say I."

Mr. Farrell did not wish to speak of his businesses. In addition to being a newsdealer he conducts a boot and shoe store.

"My life has been an eventful one," he said. "No man has had more earnest friends and at the same time such relentless enemies. I have come right up from the bottom of the ladder, and I suppose I must start downward again when my year of office is up. I hope my downward movement will receive as strong opposition as my upward one did."

Isn't that a delicious Irish touch.

Just Missed Silver Cradle.

Mr. Farrell is a strong politician and says just what he thinks. His wife is, if anything, stronger. Mrs. Farrell traces her ancestry back to the Norman Raymond Le Gros, who came here with Strongbow, and whose descendants, like the Fitzgeralds, became "more Irish than the Irish themselves." She has just presented the Lord Mayor elect with a son. Alas! had the interesting event taken place after his installation as chief magistrate the corporation would, according to ancient custom, have voted him a silver cradle.

The Mansion House, where the Lord Mayor will not reside unless his salary is restored, is one of the finest buildings in the city, situated in the fashionable quarter. It is believed that the people of Dublin will force the corporation to pay the newsdealer Lord Mayor the full salaries of the office, so that he may be able to uphold its traditional hospitality during this particular year of the coronation.

PARLOR MAIDS NOW, THE BUTLER TO GO

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

LONDON, Saturday.

What, ho! "But here's a how de do!" If a writer in one of the London morning newspapers is to be believed the old fashioned stately butler is giving way to smart, uniformed parlor maids.

According to the manager of a large servants' registry office in the Strand many of the exclusive families living in Mayfair have said farewell to the aristocratic looking gentleman's gentleman who told you in cycles that "His Lordship can't be seen."

NEW OPERA HOUSE OF UNIQUE PLAN

The Great Theatre Mr. Hammerstein is Erecting at The Strand End of Kingsway, London

Mr. Hammerstein, of New York, hopes to give the first performance at his new opera house at the Strand end of Kingsway on November 1, and from the progress already made by the builders it is safe to assume that this hope will be realized. The house is planned in the simplest way, the exits being as obvious and as easily accessible as possible. The whole house could be cleared within three minutes. The auditorium will be constructed entirely of fire-resisting materials, the roof asphalt on concrete, and the circles constructed of concrete and steel. The proscenium opening will be provided with a safety curtain constructed of steel framing and asbestos, which, in case of fire, will be lowered and automatically flooded with water, while on the stage itself a lantern will be arranged which will open automatically, thus causing a draught to carry away the heat and smoke in case of fire from the public portion of the house. The stage will be specially constructed by Mr. Hammerstein to obtain the spectacular effects which it is his intention to offer London audiences on an exceedingly large scale. The auditorium will be unusually comfortable, with every slight line perfect, no columns to obstruct the view. The ground floor, below street level, will be entirely devoted to stalls and boxes, and above the stalls, suspended from the circle, will be a complete circular tier of boxes, each with its own retiring room, two further tiers being arranged each side of the auditorium, making a total of 42 boxes, including a private suite for the King. Above the box tier will be the circle, and lower and upper galleries, the total capacity of these being about 2,700.

There will be no large promenades, the back of the circle and the gallery being screened off to aid the acoustics and prevent the audience being disturbed by promenaders.

RAID ON HATPINS

Budapest Police Have Already Seized 1,236 of Those Danger Points on Fashionable Promenades

Owing to a number of accidents which have been caused in the streets and on tramcars by the long hatpins worn by women, the Budapest police are carrying on an active crusade against this part of fashionable headgear.

At first they tried prosecuting the wearers, but this proved tedious and costly, and the police are now instructed to stop any woman wearing projecting hatpins without protectors, and confiscate the offending articles on the spot. No fewer than 1,236 hatpins have already been seized in this way on the fashionable promenades.

WITHHOLDS A LICENSE

Berlin Will Not Allow Herr Harry Walden, Player, to be an Actor-Manager

Considerable amusement has been caused by the refusal of the omnipotent Herr von Jagow, Police-President of Berlin, to grant a managerial license to Herr Harry Walden, the popular player, who aspires to become an actor-manager. Herr Walden desires to take over the control of the Lustspielhaus,, the leading home of comedy in the metropolis, but, according to a letter which his solicitors have published in the newspapers, Herr von Jagow considers Herr Walden—"on account of certain episodes in his career and certain predilections"—as unfit for the responsibilities of managership. The Police-President does not go into details, but beyond Herr Walden's habit of sudden disappearance from town, sometimes on the eve of a performance, nothing is known to his detriment. Walden is half-British, or rather half-Irish, for he was born in the Emerald Isle and grew up with English as his mother-tongue. He is indisputably the most popular matinee idol of Berlin, and an actor of much versatility, who is equally at home in Shakespeare, farce or musical comedy. He is also the best-dressed actor on the German boards, and comes nearer to the English ideal, particularly in modern drama, than any other player.

PHILOSOPHY AND DIRT

Discovery of an Unknown Race of Mountain Dwarfs

Mr. Walter Goodfellow, invalided home from the British exploring expedition in the unknown interior of New Guinea, has reached London. Of the expedition's discovery of an unknown race of mountain dwarfs, Mr. Goodfellow said:—"The tallest man we met was only 4 feet 6 inches, and it was evident that he regarded himself as a giant. Beautifully proportioned, many of them, especially the younger men, are also handsomely featured. Their skin of light bronze is also very frequently quite beautiful. Perhaps their greatest failing is their entire lack of any sense of cleanliness. I am sure that layers of dirt half an inch taick could be scraped off some of them. They are very gay little people, and in their own way something of philosophers."

A ROYAL PREACHER

Prince Max, brother of the King of Saxony, whose writings have aroused much criticism of late, will be favorably remembered by many. About a dozen years ago he was a devoted worker among the poor of Whitechapel, where his mission sermons drew large congregations to the German Church. Subsequently he won wide popularity in Paris, and all the religious rank and fashion of the French capital flocked to hear his sermons.

MISSIONARIES AS EMPIRE BUILDERS

To Their Influence Is Due the Acquisition of Many Large Territories

The expansion of South Africa is largely the work of the missionaries. In Bechuanaland the northern route was for a long time kept open solely by their influence. Some of the earliest roads were known as "Missionary Roads," and many place-names preserve the memory of individuals.

Indirectly the missionaries account for the Transvaal and Orange River Provinces. For though England had to pay $1,000,000,000 for the war of conquest, in contrast to the inexpensiveness of missionary labor, it was never theless to that latter that the great Boer Trek of 136 was due, which resulted in the founding of the Republics. For had not Dr. Philip been so doughty a champion of the natives, and so trusted an adviser of the Government, the Boers would never have moved out.

Some Great Scotsmen

Of the great achievements of Livingstone it is unnecessary to speak; but we must not forget that they opened the country to successive incursions of Englishmen, and that John Mackenzie, the missionary, was one of the first to follow him. It was Mackenzie who saved the native states from extinction by the Boers, and, as Deputy Commissioner of Bechuanaland, helped to found that province. It has been said that if his advice had been taken the Boer War would have been averted. The Moffat Treaty of 1888 with the Matabeles laid the foundation of Rhodesia for Britain. Yet that treaty was the work of a missionary, the Rev. J. S. Moffat, son of the famous Dr. Moffat.

Basutoland, the Switzerland of South Africa, Britain owes to a French missionary, Coillard of the Zambesi. Moshesh, the able Basuto chief, governed with a Cabinet of French missionaries.

Listen to Rhodes and Stead

Barotseland also, now known as North-West Rhodesia, is due to French Missionaries. Though it is as big as the German Empire it did not cost a single life. Coillard advised Lewanika, the king, to put himself under the protection of some European nation, and with great disinterestedness recommended the British. Convinced by past experience of the good judgment of the missionary, Lewanika agreed, and in consequence his country became a British Protectorate in 1890.

North-East Rhodesia, again, Britain owes to Stewart of Lovedale. By his exploration of the Chire country he supplied Lord Salisbury with the information on which he formed the British Central Africa Protectorate. By the founding of Livingstonia he did much more still to establish British authority there. It was only just in time to anticipate the great partition of the Continent, and to resist the Portuguese claim to the Nyassa region as well. As Cecil Rhodes once said: "We owe all Rhodesia to you Scotch missionaries." Or, as Stead more dramatically put it, "The frontier has advanced on the stepping-stones of missionary graves."

ELECTRICITY ON OLYMPIC

Power Plant on Modern Steamer is No Small Affair

The electrical power plant of a modern transatlantic steamer is no small installation. The steamer "Olympic" is to be provided with four units generating 2,144 horse-power. This power will be employed in lighting the vessel and for radiators in the first-class quarters; for cooking purposes, for operating various machines, cranes, winches, etc., and for running two passenger elevators and eight freight elevators. The lighting system will total 100,000 candle-power. At present while being fitted up, the vessel is furnished with electric light and power from a 320-kilowatt plant on a tug moored alongside. The tug is also provided with a steam fire pump for use in case of emergency.

FORTY MILES A DAY

Archdeacon Sinclair Has Taken Many a Long Walk

It was a London policeman who, referring to the splendid physique of Dr Sinclair, Archdeacon of London; whose forthcoming retirement has been announced, said, "He ought to be one of us." Dr Sinclair stands considerably over 6 feet in height, and is broad in proportion. His father was one of fifteen children, the shortest of whom was 6 feet in height and the tallest 6 feet 7 inches. One day the tallest of the Archdeacon's aunts was accosted by an Irish beggar woman, who invoked blessings on her head in the hope of alms. Finding her blandishments in vain, the woman changed her tone, and exclaimed, "At least ye might give me your shoe to make a cradle for my baby." In his days of greater leisure, Dr. Sinclair used to ride a good deal and cycle—he once cycled from London to Thurso, 730 miles—and he has tramped his forty miles a day for several days in succession, and even slept out on a moor in Scotland after such a walk.

"LUCKY LAMBTON"

The Life and Soul of Ladysmith Garrison

So Sir Hedworth Lambton has often been referred to on account of his many extraordinary escapes from death, and the nickname will be revived now that Lady Meux has bequeathed to him $100,000 and the residue of her estate. One of the conditions of the bequest, however, is that he must assume the name and arms of Meux within a year. Sir Hedworth joined the service as a boy of fourteen, and was present at the bombardment of Alexandria and the Battle of Tel-el-Kebir. It is in connection with the siege of Ladysmith, however, that he is especially noted, Sir George White describing him as the "life and soul of the garrison."

BITERS BITTEN

A Good Story of a Tenderfoot and a Game of Poker

Down at one of the Rhodesian mining camps there is a bar with a regular poker "push," and the barman stands in with the gang. Any newchum with sporting proclivities has a poor show.

One night the tenderest new-chum imaginable, just up from Beira, after half-a-dozen drinks in the saloon, agreed to take a hand in a half-crown game.

Things went along in the usual way for a while. Then an amazing series of nods and winks began to pass about. The barman had signalled that the tenderfoot had four kings on the draw. There were more nods and winks, and betting began.

In the midst of the betting a boy brought sandwiches and whisky in order to distract the mug, and while the poor dupe was tossing off his drink the sharper next him slipped a sixth card on to his hand, thus, of course, nullifying it.

The unconscious youngster took up a huge sandwich, bit off a large mouthful, and began to bet again. Right and left, of course, they raised him. He ate on and bet away calmly. An enormous sum lay on the table.

Then suddenly the barman resumed his nods and winks. He was terribly excited. Something was wrong. The sharpers, a little anxious, called the kid.

The blue-eyed darling finished the last bite of his sandwich, took a long drink of whisky, and then laid his original five cards. Then in silence he gathered in his vast pile of winnings, and with a cool nod took his leave.

After his departure there was a terrible time.

"What the dickens did he do with that sixth card?" the sharpers cried.

"Didn't you see? Didn't you see?" cried the barman, dancing up and down with rage. "He ate it with his sandwich."

A JOURNALIST'S WORK

Busy Life of George Gordon Bennett, New York

The famous proprietor of the "New York Herald," Mr. Gordon Bennett, is reputed to be the hardest-worked journalist alive; and although he finds time to go in for yachting, motoring, and sport of all kinds, it is only because he begins his working day at five o'clock in the morning and gets through as much work in one hour as the average man could get through in six. Mr. Bennett will be seventy in a few months, but seems only to grow more energetic as the years pass by; and he can navigate a yacht, steer a motor, or fire a gun with all the accuracy of a man half his age.

HUGE LEOPARD AT LARGE

During the menagerie performance near Badajos a huge leopard leaped from its cage and sprang amongst the spectators, causing a terrible panic. The leopard killed two men and desperately wounded four others, after wards escaping to the woods across the Portuguese frontier. A hunt was organised, and the leopard was eventually shot.

An Encouraging Message

I have a message of hope and good cheer, of encouragement and inspiration to every suffering woman. I have endured the torture due to female troubles and the consequent despondency and mental agony almost to the point of despair, and I have been restored from this condition to a state of vigorous health, and to the happy, exhilarating frame of mind which accompanies physical well being. This change has been brought about wholly by the use of ORANGE LILY.

In addition I have had the privilege and pleasure of inducing multitudes of other suffering women to give ORANGE LILY a trial, and have received thousands of enthusiastic acknowledgments of the blessings it has brought to them. The following is a sample:

Truro, N. S., April 5, 1909.

Dear Mrs. Currah,—Your very kind letter was received yesterday. In reply to your question about my health, I am thankful to say that I am very well. As I have never given you a statement of my case you may be interested in it.

For several years I have suffered untold agony. This suffering was continuous, but I would have violent attacks every few weeks, each attack lasting several days. The first Sunday in November, I felt the pain increasing and so did not go to prayers. The rest of the family did go, and soon after the forcing down pains seized me and I had to remain on the floor until their return. I was in great pain all night and was very sick for a whole week.

Then Mrs. L. came to see me and told me of your wonderful medicine. I got my husband to send for it right away, as I was too sick to write myself. (My doctor could do nothing for me.) I have used 5 Boxes of ORANGE LILY, have had three months of good rest, and am now well, never better in my life. I have not had the old pains since. I often ask my husband if it is myself that is going around and doing my own work. I can scarcely believe it. It brings tears of joy to my eyes. I could shout it to all the world. I cannot speak enough in its praise.

Your friend, MRS. E. H. F.

Receiving, as I do, dozens of such reports each day, I feel impelled to make known to my suffering sisters the merits of ORANGE LILY. It differs from other so-called remedies in that it is not taken internally. It is a strictly local treatment, and is applied directly to the affected organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissues, expelling the stagnant foreign matter which has been irritating the membrane and oppressing the nerves, and a growing feeling of physical and mental relief is noticeable almost from the start. It is a positive, scientific remedy and even if you use no more than the Free Trial treatment you will be very materially benefited.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

I want every reader of this, who suffers in any way from painful monthly periods, irregularities, leucorrhoea, inflammation or congestion of the womb, pains in the back, etc., to send me their addresses, and I will forward at once, without charge, 10 days' treatment. If your case is not far advanced it may entirely cure you, and in any event it will do you much good. I am so earnest in making this statement, and so positive that it is true, that I trust every sufferer who reads this notice will take advantage of my offer and get cured at home, without a doctor's bill. Address, enclosing 2 stamps, MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, Windsor, Ont.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

It is a thousand times easier to contract a new habit than to get rid of an old one.

The sky is not less blue because the blind man cannot see it.

The other day we read the following letter printed in a city newspaper: "Dear Editor: I am a good young man who always had plenty of girl friends, and who has recently come to the city. Now my temperament is such that I must associate, but do not know any girls and have no friends in the city."

Thousands of our young people leave our country homes every year to live and to work in our larger cities. They may not be wise in taking the step but the ambition of youth is deaf and blind to saner advice. One of the greatest inconvenience and temptation is that they are strangers among strangers. Making friends with anybody and everybody is both dangerous and foolish, especially so in a large city. There are too many rogues and gilded dens of immorality in cities for the inexperienced young man or woman to promiscously select company and places of amusement. Before they know it they may be entangled in some vice blighting forever their purity and honesty.

We would sound this note of warning because of the youths that have left or are thinking of leaving our own community. While at home you knew with whom you could safely associate. You had also many friends to advise you. That is all different away from home among strangers.

Without preaching a sermon, but only seeking to give wholesome advice, we would say that the safest way to become acquainted with the best people is to connect yourself with some church. Go to the Sunday school and join the Bible class. In this way you will meet the most moral young men and ladies of that locality. Inform the head of the Sunday school and the pastor of the church that you are a stranger, and they will see that you will have friends. This method of gaining friends, when away from friends may not be the purest, but they are a thousand times better than purest of the foul found upon the streets, in saloons and in questionable places of amusement.

The Bright Side.

We believe that the world is a good place and is growing better. This world began with a garden and it is going to end with a garden. It's a pleasant place to live in and if we had been consulted as to which of the stars we should choose for a habitation, we could not have done better than to select this. We have always been glad that we got aboad this planet. It just suits us. To our mind the very best colour in the universe for water is blue; the very best shade for grass is green, and the very best for water is crystalline flash. The mountains are just high enough for me, the valleys just low enough, the rivers just swift enough. The human face is most wonderfully adapted for its use with sunshine in its smile and tempest in its frown; with two eyes, one more than is necessary, so that if one is put out we still may see the beautiful things God has placed around us; with one nose, most admirably arranged to take in the sweet perfumes of earth. Art, even at its best, may be justly criticised, but where is the blasphemer who would dare criticise the arch of the sky, or the crest of a wave or the flock of fleecy clouds that the shepherd wind is driving over the pastures of the sky. There is only one discord to a thousand harmonies. There is a whole sky full of robins to one hooting night owl, and to every destructive torrent there are hundreds of placid streams with water lilies anchored at their banks and stars laying bright reflections to sleep in their bosoms.

Woman's Work.

The quiet faithful way in which a woman often of superior intellect, and decided talent for higher things, will dish-wash her life away for her husband and children, is a marvel of patient endurance. Here the servitude of woman is the heaviest. No sooner is her work done than it requires to be done over again. Men take contracts of work on them, finish them, and they are over for all time. The prospect of ending them and drawing pay for the labour is alluring. And woman's work holds no such promise. She washes on Monday after Monday the same garments until there is no more of them to wash; then they are replenished by new ones like old, and the rubbing and wringing goes on until the worn-out hands are folded for their eternal and only rest. She mends stockings, with tireless fidelity, week after week, and year after year. Every morning the same rooms are to be put in order, only to be in the wildest disorder by evening. The same stockings, the same washing, the same cleaning and cooking in endless rotation, which, if done promptly and properly, leaves no time for reading and self-culture which, aside from the pleasure it affords the woman, is the only means of fitting one-self for the intellectual culture of children.

What wonder that women are not thinkers, or that the daughters of successive generations are vapid, uncultured creatures, incapable of forming an opinion on the most important subjects of human consideration.

There is too little brightness in the lives of women. They have too little help in their domestic occupations.

Spring is coming. That Ashburnham robin had better look to its laurels. Here is the Spring Poet.

LOVE, COURTSHIP AND—

(As seen by the Cynic)

Chap. I.

Sitting in the gloaming one Summer's eve gone by,
A maiden and her lover—both so very shy,
Holding hands together—not another care;
Just two simple youngsters, building castles in the air.

Chap. II.

Sitting in the parlour, when the lights were low,
How he came to do it, that we'll never know;
Stole his arm around her—gave her his first kiss,
Walked on air long after in ecstatic bliss.

Chap. III.

Sitting 'neath the maples, way out in Jackson Park,
Looking very foolish—lucky it was dark;
Screwing up his courage—trusting all to fate,
Popped the awful question—fixed the very date.

Chap. IV.

Sitting by the fireside, weary, worn, and sad,
Thinking of this story—getting mighty mad.
Vacant chair before him—empty as his life;
And the maid he courted—another fellow's wife.

—The Cynic.

A SOBBING CRY.

The sobbing cry of a heedless world.
Rings wide, sweeps wide,
To the silent trees that line the shore,
Beyond the tide.

And they echo back to my yearning heart
That waits, ah, waits;
The song of an angel that, weeping, stands,
At Heaven's gates.

—Adolph R eder, in Newark News.

PINEAPPLE CAKE.

Make a cake after the rule given for cocoanut cake, and for the dressing to put between the layers, prepare a pineapple as follows: Pare the pineapple and chop, or grate very fine; put in a stewpan with enough sugar to make a thick syrup when boiled.

Save a large tablespoonful of the pineapple to put with frosting and spread the rest, when cool, between the layers of cake.

Make a frosting of the beaten white of one egg, the tablespoonful of pineapple and enough sugar to make a thick frosting; spread on the top and sides of the cake.—Philadelphia Times.

Henry IV., Part II, Act. III., Sc. I.

Crown as used in this sentence is the symbol of royalty and authority. The words were uttered by Henry VI, as he was nearing the close of his life. It had been prophesied by Richard II., when he was forced to resign his kingdom, that Henry would have no secure seat on the throne, that, before the crown he sought should live in peace,

"Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons, Shall ill become the flower of England's face."

These prophetic words had been fulfilled to the letter. Henry's kingdom had been continually rent by civil strife ;the very men who had drawn the sword in his behalf had risen in arms against him .So suspicious had he grown that he even suspected his son, afterwards Henry V., of having designs on his life. He had thought how sweet a thing it would be to wear a crown; he had found it "polished perturbation! golden care!"

Henry is not the only king who has experienced this. One-third of Shakespeare's dramas deal with the stories of kings. They make tragic reading. Through wickedness, weakness or tyranny, the kings of Shakespeare's dramas hold but an insecure seat on their thrones. King John and Henry IV. had usurped the throne, had come to it by "by-paths and crooked ways" to use Henry's own words, and they were continually battling with enemies or trembling lest rebellion should break out; Richard II, like Charles I. of more recent history, was a weakling, a licentious spendthrift, so false to his trust that his enemies had no difficulty in making head against him; Richard III. and Macbeth were tyrannous monsters, who had waded through blood to their thrones, and they were able to maintain their power only by slaughter.

In all these instances the heads that wore the crowns had uneasy nights every sound or shadow suggested an assassin.

When Prince Henry was at the bedside of his dying father soliloquizing on the crown he remarked:

"O polish'n perturbation! golden care'
That keeps the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night! sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet
As he, whose brow with homely biggen (night cap) bound,
Snores out the watch of night."

This meditation did not keep Henry from placing the crown on his own head in anticipation of his kingship, nor did it induce him to lead a life of sloth and activity.. Crowns have their cares, but power and rule are pleasing to the human spirit, and for a crown many would gladly risk life itself. Who would want to be that snoring clown? One year of life such as Henry V. lived after he became king is worth an eternity of existence such as is suggested by the expression "snore out the watch of night." A plague on such deeply sweet sleep!

There is supreme pleasure in the struggle for authority; the striver believes that within the circle of the crown he is aiming at is Elysium. He learns otherwise. Increased honours give increased responsibilities. His elevation to a lofty position makes him a more prominent mark for the missiles of his enemies. Dean Swift very truly wrote that, "Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent." If a man rise to prominence in the political world a thousand assassins of character lie in wait for him; the mistakes of his life are dragged to the light of day; his actions and words are misrepresented. He is taxed for the privilege of wearing a crown, but he would be a poor creature if he shirked office and responsibility, because they brought watchful days and restless nights. It is the same with wealth. The successful man is usually a much abused man. If he husbands his thousands in order to make millions he is designated a tyrant capitalist or a miserly money-grabber. If he squanders his riches in luxurious living he is termed a gilded fool. His crown of wealth is going to bring him more cares than joys, more enemies than trustworthy friends.

The eminent man may suffer from censure, but he has joys that the ordinary mortals wot not of. He may not sleep so soundly, or eat with such relish as the hedgers and ditchers of the earth. His responsibilities may shatter his health and shorten his life, but wha t of that? Life should be measured not by years but by work done. Length of years may mean mere existence, and man was not born merely to "sleep and feed." He was born for a crown with its cares. Whether or not he win that crown lies with himself. Success will probably bring him anxiety and make him enemies, but adversity and enemies only test the strong man. He delights in the battle; he finds pleasure in even the uneasy nights that are filled with dreams and plans for the struggle of the morrow.

RHEUMATISM CURED TO STAY CURED

Liniments of No Avail—The Trouble Must be Treated Through the Blood

This article is intended as a talk to the man or woman with rheumatism who wants to be cured. Not merely relieved, not half cured, but actually cured. The most a rheumatic sufferer can hope for in rubbing something on the swollen aching joints is a little relief. And all the while the trouble is becoming more firmly seated. Medical authorities now know that rheumatism is rooted in the blood, and that while rubbing on liniments or hot fomentations may give temporary relief, they cannot possibly cure—you must go to the root of the trouble in the blood. That is why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure rheumatism. They make new, rich blood, which expels the poisonous acid, and the rheumatism disappears. There are thousands of former rheumatic sufferers in Canada, now well and strong, who thank Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that they are now free from the aches and pains and tortures of this dreaded trouble. Mr. Joseph Luddington, New Harbor, N. S., says: "Some three years ago my wife was stricken with rheumatism, and suffered so much that we despaired of her ever getting well again. At first she was able to go about, but in spite of all we did for her she grew so bad that we had to lift her in and out of bed; and finally the pains grew so excruciating that we could only move her little by little, with the sheet under her. Finally we were induced to get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for her. I do not remember just how many boxes she took, but I do know that they were the first medicine that reached the disease, and that she continued to improve until she was again as well as ever, and could do her household work. To us it is simply marvellous what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for her, and we are glad to give this testimonial in the hope that it will benefit some other poor sufferer."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CANADA'S CALL.

Loud as the voice of her deep booming waters,
Clear as the lilt of her song birds in May,
Canada calls to her sons and her daughters:
Lift high your standard of manhood to-day.

Here in the dawn of a great nation's morning,
Rings the clear voice of our country's appeal,
Calling for heroes whose self-interest scorning,
Do what they know and dare what they feel.

Canada calls! Then let the response be
One that shall honour our glorious land;
Let us be all we would pray that our sons be,
All that our hopes and traditions demand.

Not in the wealth of her prairies so peerless,
Not in the output of silver and gold
But in a people, free, righteous and fearless,
Lies her supremest of treasures untold.

Pure as the gold in the heart of her mountains,
Strong as her torrents that leap to the sea,
Straight as the pine tree and clear as her fountains,
Honest and fearless, face—forward and free.

A REFORMATORY FOR INEBRIATES.

Its Need Set Forth by Dr. Phelan of Kingston—An Array of Statistics.

"According to the laws governing growth and development, the highest elements of brain activity and power—the character—are formed last, but from the addiction to alcohol they are the first to suffer and to be destroyed. Fully 80 per cent. of all inebriates are born with defective brains and are descendants of inebriates, epileptic, or feeble-minded parentage, and at least 70 per cent. of all perpetrated crimes are directly or indirectly attributable to alcoholism. Fully 20 to 25 per cent. of all insane owe their insanity to alcohol. Alcohol was often the direct cause of epilepsy in a drinker, and fully 30 per cent. of epileptics have alcoholic parents.

Past the Experimental Stage.

"Institutions for the detention of the criminal inebriate have so far passed the experimental stage and may be confidently regarded as worthy of our best support and encouragement. After many years of study and observation in connection with this important subject and being connected with the largest institution for criminals in the Dominion of Canada, the Dominion Penitentiary at Kingston, in which as a matter of course, a large number of criminal inebriates shortly after their sentence are committed, as there are no establishments of detention in Canada, I am in a position to make the statement that the only proper way in which to treat the criminal inebriate is to place him in an institution where his whole method of living is completely changed, where he can have good food, regular hours, healthful reading material, suitable, employment, and in a brief period sometimes a complete and favorable change in the disposition of the man can be noticed. He is, as it were, taken out of his surroundings and is breathing a new atmosphere.

An Inebriate Reformatory.

"The inebriate is a drunkard and drunkenness is alcoholism. When a man cannot stop drinking he is a drunkard, or when a person finds that he cannot conduct himself soberly under the social conditions which are normal to his time, then he is a drunkard. That drunkenness is at the bottom of most crime, pauperism and lunacy is beyond question. Drunkards are not insane, but degraded. Drunkenness is more a vice to be reformed than a disease to be treated. If the purpose of punishment is the prevention of crime, the reformation of the criminal, and the protection of society, then the prison is no place for the inebriate offender. An inebriate reformatory is the proper place for him, where his defects may be found out; a year being long enough in that institution, as the atmosphere of an institution is not calculated to restore the positive side of character; a long residence in an institution of the kind destroys initiative and weakens the will.

Measure of Prevention.

"If an inebriate is prone to commit crime, as we believe, there is reason why he should be confined before he has occasion to do wrong. An experienced medical man should be attached to every police court to look after such matters. An inebriate reformatory for criminal inebriates and others, is necessary, to repair the person's physique in every way. There he should be free from the irritation of friends and could be employed in agricultural pursuits which are very beneficial for him, and after his term had expired he could be discharged from the institution as a useful member of society."

What Rum Cost One Man.

A pitiable instance of how strong drink will drag a man down was furnished a few days ago when a Salvation Army officer took to Bellevue Hospital as a victim of nephritis a man of fifty-five who was penniless, broken and cast off by his family and friends. This victim of rum is the son of one of the world's most famous men. As a young man he went abroad with his father and met royalty. After a college education he was a member of the New York Stock and Produce Exchanges. He was a member of the most exclusive clubs, and had a wife and four children. He became involved in a financial scandal, was dropped far down in the social scale. It was impossible for his family to aid him other than to pay his board in places where he could not obtain money or credit. He became familiar to men who frequent resorts late at night. He was often seen sweeping out saloons, doing errands, happy to acquire liquor. Disheveled, ragged, unkempt, he was almost unrecognizable. Now he is apparently near a pauper's grave. And he, alas! is but one of the many thousands who go the same career. Can rum have a stronger arraignment?

CONSERVATIVES IN ADDIENCE INTERRUPTED CONSERVATIVE SPEAKERS AT NORWOOD

Farmers Objected to Statements Made Against Reciprocity and the Meeting Was Not the Success Anticipated.

SAM HUGHES THERE

Conservative speakers failed to make the impression they sought at a party meeting held in Norwood Town Hall last evening. Questions relating to provincial politics were discussed by Mr. Thompson and Mr. Hurston. It was when Mr. Sexsmith started to discuss the proposed reciprocal trade relations with the United States that the feeling of the meeting on this question became evident. Mr. Sexsmith claimed that while in a few individual instances trade arrangements, such as proposed might be of some benefit to the farmers. On the whole, farmers stood to lose more than they would gain by allowing the United States free access to our markets. "Our wheat," said the speaker, "will all go to the mills of the United States and increase the traffic there at the expense of our own railways. Farmers in the audience were warned that they were not only giving free trade in agricultural products to the United States, but owing to the favoured nation clause in the tariff schedules, farm products of the Argentine, Australia, Sweden, Norway, and Japan would be admitted as well. Mr. Sexsmith claimed that under our present system of taxation, the farmers are taxed more lightly than any other class, as more of their necessities are raised at home.

From the first it was evident that the farmers present disagreed with Mr. Sexsmith as to the value of the United States markets for their produce, and no sooner had he seated himself than Mr. A. G. Brethen, a local Conservative farmer, was on his feet, and asked that a free discussion of the subject be allowed, as they, as fair minded men, desired to hear both sides of this question. Peterborough is a dairy county, and to show the value of the United States market for our produce, Mr. Brethen pointed out that in the last year $3,000,000 worth of cream, not $1,000,000 worth, as Mr. Sexsmith had claimed, had been shipped to the United States and the price realized per hundred on the milk so marketed was 10 to 12 cents higher than when made into cheese in Canada.

No Money in It.

"Mr. Sexsmith, you are a farmer," said Mr. Brethen, "and you should know what it costs to produce milk. Is there any money in milk at 88 cents a hundred. That is what we have to take for it when our cheese is marketed at Old Country prices?"

A free discussion, however, was not to be permitted. The advantages of the trade agreement to the farming population are so evident that the whole effect of the meeting would be lost were it thrown open to discussion, and in spite of the protests of the audience both Liberal and Conservative, Mr. Brethen was obliged to take his seat.

Col. Sam Hughes was the last speaker o fthe evening and for almost two hours he delighted his audience with a splendid flow of language. He called on them to stand by the old flag and have nothing to do with the United States, the openly avowed object of whose statesmen was the annexation of Canada. In the estimation of the speaker, the poetry of Robert Burns, such songs as Annie Laurie, and the bright glances of British lassies had done more to make Britain great than all her trade relations. As usual, when the Colonel came down to details, he was lamentably weak and his figures were very much astray. Speaking of the benefit to Ontario live stock men, he asked them to look in that morning's Globe, as he had done, and they would see that on Buffalo and Chicago markets, cattle and hogs were quoted $1, $2, or even $3 lower than on the Toronto market.

Complete discredit was thrown on Colonel Hughes' statistics by F. E. Ellis, of Peterborough, who produced a copy of the Globe ot which Colonel Hughes referred and gave quotations on the Toronto, Chicago and Buffalo markets, showing that on that particular morning to which Col. Hughes referred, cattle sold 65 cents higher and hogs 75 cents higher at the United States centres. Mr. Ellis was anxious to know why the quotations in his copy of the Globe differed so decidely from the ones which the Colonel had seen.

Farmers who attended this meeting in anticipation of hearing a free and open discussion of the trade agreement as it affected their interests, were much disappointed with the one sided way in which the meeting was conducted and many Conservative farmers were not at all backward in discrediting the statements advanced and in expressing their disapproval of the meeting

"A NERVOUS WRECK"

"My daughter is rapidly becoming a nervous wreck," said an anxious father to a friend who happened to be a druggist,—"she has no appetite, is run-down, weak, takes no interest in anything and we cannot find anything that helps her."

"Why don't you give her Vinol"—said the druggist—"it is not a secret nostrum, just a simple and delicious cod liver and iron tonic—and the best strength creator and general all round tonic we have ever sold in our store. Take a bottle home and try it. We'll return your money if it does not help her."

Within ten days the father came back for another bottle of Vinol, saying that he had never seen such a change in a girl in his life, and he felt sure one more bottle of Vinol would restore her to her normal condition."

Such cases as the above are constantly coming to our attention, and we ask every run-down, nervous, debilitated, aged or weak person in this vicinity, and every person suffering from a chronic cough, cold or bronchial trouble, to try a bottle of Vinol on the same terms as above. RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT SHELVED BY UNITED STATES CONGRESS FOR PRESENT

Senate After an All-night Session Declined This Morning to Add Reciprocity as a Rider to the Tariff Board Bill---Amendment to This Effect Was Squelched Twice---The Only Hope for the Bill Now is an Extra Session of Congress.

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, MARCH 4.—So far as the U. S. congress is concerned, the Canadian reciprocity agreement this morning was shelved for the time being by the Senate, which after an all night session, declined to add reciprocity as a rider to the tariff board bill which had been under discussion. Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, twice tried to get this through as an amendment, but was squelched each time. This means that the Canadian reciprocity bill has been side-tracked by the present congress on the ground of political exigency. It must now await President Taft's order for an extra session, which may be called for the fifteenth instant and may not. To sum up the whole situation; the reciprocity bill has met with a temporary but very serious reverse here.

Among the supporters of the bill there is a decided feeling of glumness following the Senate's action here this morning. 'Tis pointed out that the only hope for the slightest chance for the bill now is an extra session, and experts of the United States' constitution, profess to see no authority for calling an extra session. The prospects depend then almost entirely on Taft's assurance that there would be an extra session unless the bill passed. He is absolutely committed to it.

Stirring scenes marked the close of Congress to-day. The House of Representatives abandoned the tariff board bill at the last moment. Speaker Jos. Cannon showed his strength of dominion in the last moments of his power with admirable firmness, and regard to constitutional liberalities. In the Senate there were several attempts to block business, and the old tactics of setting back the clock in order to rush business through were adopted. However, the filibustering Senators finally gave way and put through several necessary measures. At 12.05 the committees of both Houses waited on the President, with the notification that they were ready to adjourn. The prospects are now that an extra session will be called April 4th ofr consideration of the Canadian reciprocity bill.

DEEP MYSTERY SURROUNDING STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE OF MISS ELEANOR CUYLER, DAUGHTER OF N.Y. FINANCIER

Will the strange case of Dorothy Arnold be solved as was the strange case of Eleanor Cuyler, daughter of the greatest financial power in the United States?

Miss Arnold, the flesh-and-blood girl, dropped completely out of sight on Fifth Avenue, New York, in broad daylight. Eleanor Cuyler, daughter of the greatest financier in the United States, disappears, as if by magic, off Broadway, New York, in broad daylight. Miss Cuyler's family and friends kept her disappearance secret for forty-six days, while they and a force of detectives search high and low for her. Only Eleanor Cuyler's rugged old father, a trio of determined and daring young men, a remarkable detective and the President of the United States are aware of the disappearance of the great banker's daughter. And how they unravel step by step the apparently inexplicable mystery of her disappearance is as thrilling reading as has been written in many days, especially in view of the equally strange fact case of Miss Dorothy Arnold.

Every newspaper reader is keenly familiar with the case of Miss Arnold and every reader will as unquestionably take as keen interest in "The Strange Case of Eleanor Cuyler" because of the startling similarity between the fiction story and the subsequent development of the fact story and also because taken alone "The Strange Case of Eleanor Cuyler" is a corking mystery story. This thrilling, timely, newsy serial will commence in the Examiner on Wednesday next, and should be read by every one. It is from the pen of Kingsland Crosby, and will be the greatest serial yet published by the Examiner.

THE PETERBOROUGH CHEESE BOARD ALMOST UNANIMOUSLY ENDORSE RECIPROCITY WITH U.S.

At the annual meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board, held this afternoon the subject of the proposed reciprocity agreement with the United States, was discussed at length, and after careful deliberation the following resolution was unanimously, with one exception, carried by the score of representatives present, each of which represent thirty or more patrons.

Moved by E. Hawthorne, seconded by W. A. Anderson, that whereas a certain section of the citizens of our country, notably bankers, manufacurers, etc., are deeply concerned as to the welfare of the farmer in the present negotiations respecting reciprocity with the U. S.

And whereas, we always cherish and admire the good will and advice of others in the upbuilding of the farming community, believing it is the basic industry in Canada. Yet we hesitate to accept the advice of those whom we firmly believe are exploiting the farmers for their own purpose, and we stubbornly refuse to submit being made "the catspaw" for others.

Therefore ,we the members of the Peterborough Cheese Board, at this, their 34th annual meeting, affirm, and unanimously with one exception, support the enactment of the present reciprocity agreement being negotiated by the Government with the United States. And further, we would respectfully ask those who are so anxious about our prosperity, to seek their own welfare, as the farmers of Canada are well able to hold their own against all comers, when not handicapped by trade regulations.

Resolved, that the secretary forward to our local representatives, Messrs. Stratton and Sexsmith, a copy of this resolution, asking them to support the present reciprocity agreement.

THE KNOX CHURCH CHOIR VISITED LAKEFIELD

Local Organization Delighted Large Audience Last Night by Contributing a High-class Programme

WELL RECEIVED

Auspicious weather conditions—that is, for sleighing — favoured the annual visit of the choir of Knox church to the village last night. The moon shone with a bright radiance on the ice-bound country, and a cool wind blew, imparting a bright glow to the cheeks and noses, too, of the sleighers.

To the number of about 30, the body accepted the invitation of the Mission Band of Lakefield Presbyterian church to render a programme of secular music. The party left Knox church at 7 and at 8.30 they arrived at the church in Lakefield, and were soon on the platform for the first item.

The building was well filled, the audience being of a very appreciative nature.

Rev. Mr. Keith, of Knox church, was unable to proceed with the choir, and Rev. Mr. McCorkindale acted as chairman in a very able manner.

After introduction by the chairman, the choir rendered the opening solo chorus, "God Save the King," the setting by the famous composer, Sir Edward Elgar, the audience upstanding during the rendition. The solo was taken in an acceptable manner by Miss Jean Robson, and the choir in the chorus appeared to fine effect. The next item was a few remarks by the chairman, following which was a vocal duet, "Life's Dream is O'er" by Miss Parker and Mr. Thompson. This number was nicely rendered and well received. Then a chorus by the choir, "Wake, Lords and Ladies Gay," showed the powers of the members in a marked way, going, as the title implies, with a fine swing. A solo by Miss Robson, entitled, "The Swallows," was a sweet item, and her expression of the song left nothing to be desired. Then followed a pleasing item, in the form of a male voice quartette, Messrs. Dickson, Pratt, Allen and Thompson, who rendered "The City Choir," their effect being heartily accepted by the audience. Next in turn came a solo by Mr. John Anderson, "I Seek For Thee in Every Flower," which was beautifully rendered, taking the desired effect upon the audience. After this number came a vocal duet, by Messrs. Allen and Thompson, entitled "Excelsior," being given in an able manner. This ended the first part of the programme, in the interval the chairman addressing a few words.

The first item of the second part was the chorus, "Boat Song," the words and music, as sung by the choir, seeming to carry one along the stream, and was appreciated by the listeners. A Scottish number, "My Ain Folk," by Mr. Robt. Dickson, was expressively rendered, and demanded an encore, to which he gave, "The Golf Song," a humorous item, which was very acceptable. "Pro Phundo Basso"—a humorous quartette by Misses Bartley and Williams and Messrs. Dickson and Thompson—was the feature of the evening, the rendition showing a complete mastery of the various parts; and the members had to respond to an urgent encore. Mr. George Allan appeared in fine voice in the solo, "Son of the Desert," showing to good effect in the comprcated notes. The choir then rendered the chorus, "Tell Her I Love Her So," in a most pleasing way, the quality of tone being well balanced. "The Basket of Chestnuts" by the male voice quartette was an intricate item; as the titles shows, the whole being a composition of various songs and choruses, and was received with marked appreciation. The solo, "Thora" by Mr. Thompson, was an item demanding wide range of tone, and this was shown by the soloist to good advantage. "Good-night, Good-night, Beloved," the closing item of the programme, by the Misses Robson and Williams and Messrs. Dickson and Thompson was a pleasing and appropriate finish, and was an excellently balanced item, and well rendered.

Rev. Mr. McCorkindale, Mr. Graham and others moved votes of thanks to the choir, with the hope that the party would soon pay another visit to Lakefield.

Mr. Thompson, the conductor of the choir, expressed the pleasure at being able to render the programme, and returned thanks, on behalf of the choir, for the attention and kindness shown.

The programme reflected creditably on Mr. Thompson and showed the pains which he has taken to bring the choir to its present state of efficiency.

A word of praise is also due the accompanist, Mrs. Evans, who, at the last minute agreed to act in this capacity. She showed skill and technique in her playing and to her is due a large share of the success of the programme.

At the conclusion of the concert, the choir was entertained to a dainty and substantial repast by the Mission Band. And a word of praise is due to the ladies of this order for the pains taken to attend to the wants of the inner man.

With handshakes and good-byes the sleighs were then boarded and the return journey began about midnight, Peterborough being reached at "the wee sma' oor ayont the twal," the evening being voted by all as "dandy."

BOWEL TROUBLE MAKES SICKLY BABIES

Bowel trouble is the cause of most of the ailments from which little ones suffer. When baby's bowels are not working regularly illness is sure to appear, but when the bowels are regular the little one is usually bright, active and happy. No other medicine for babies has such good effect on the bowels as has Baby's Own Tablets. They make their action regular, sweeten the stomach and promote good health. Concerning them Mrs. Freeman Feener, of Barry's Corner, N.S., writes "I can heartily recommend Baby's Own Tablets for all the troubles from which little ones suffer. My baby girl was troubled with her bowels and was so small and puny I thought we would lose her. I saw Baby's Own Tablets advertised and began giving them to her and now she is a big, healthy happy baby. For this I thank the Tablets, and I always keep them in the house." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FARMERS COMPLAIN TO THE COUNCIL OF POLLUTION OF THE OTONABEE RIVER

DEATH WAS VERY SUDDEN

Thomas Armstrong Passed Away at Nicholls Hospital Last Night a Few Minutes After His Arrival

DUE TO HEART FAILURE

Thomas Armstrong died last night in the Nicholls Hospital shortly after his removal there from a local hotel. Heart failure was the immediate cause of death. Deceased was apparently in good health up to about 6 o'clock when he complained of feeling unwell. Medical aid was immediately summoned and the man removed to the Nicholls Hospital. He succumbed shortly after his arrival there.

Deceased was 59 years of age, and had been employed in the woods all winter, but came into the city about two weeks ago.

Deceased leaves seven brothers and three sisters to mourn his loss, namely, William, James and David, of Kendal; Richard of Manvers; Edward of Muskoka; Andrew of Peterborough and John of Monaghan. The sisters are Jane of Kendal; Mrs. McLean of Toronto; Mrs. Patterson of Clarke.

The funeral took place this afternoon at 3 o'clock, from Comstock's undertaking establishment to the Little Lake Cemetery.

LOOKING BACK NINE YEARS.

Nine years ago the "Opposition" gave us six months to "peter out". This was in 1901. During 1910 we have enrolled more students and qualified more stenographers than any other college in the city. Nine years ago (when 30-day Syl-la-bic Shorthand was a new thing) we taught the student, placed him in a position, told the employer to prove him before engaging him, and then, and not until then, would we ask the student to pay us our tuition fees. To-day we enjoy the largest enrollment of any stenographic college in Toronto, besides having thirteen branch colleges throughout Canada. Schools and systems have come and gone, but the Moon College has come to stay, and may be found at 282-286 Yonge street, Toronto, able and willing to verify every claim regarding their 30-day Shorthand.

ANOTHER SYSTEM WANTED

The committee of the Whole Council met last night, with the following members present, Mayor Morrow, chairman, Aldermen Graham, Anderson, Brown, Metheral, Edgar, Buller and Kerneghan.

A delegation farmers from Otonabee, North and South Monaghan were present to discuss the sewage question with the Council, Mr. Wm. Waterman, Reeve of South Monaghan, acted as chairman of the delegation. He gave his views in the matter as follows: "The question of sewage in the river, is well known to you. About fifteen years ago, the city asked to run the sewage into the river for a term of five years, after which it was understood they were to dispose of it in some other way. The farmers strongly protested it at the time, but, however, it was agreed that the city should be given the five year term. The five years went past, and now nearly ten years has passed on top of it, and we think that it is about time something was being done. The citizens must know that the sewage is poisoning the pasture, and that stock both horses and cattle, are dying from the effects of it. The milk is being excluded from the factories on that account. A deputation waited upon the Provincial Board of Health in Toronto, and they agreed with us. They advised us to lay the matter before the city council here, and to ask them to get some other way of disposing of the sewage. The river at present for about ten miles down, is nothing but a cess pool. I can remember when the water was clean enough to drink, but I think a man would have to be fortified with good Scotch whiskey to do it now."

Mr. Jos. Clark was the next speaker called. He stated as follows: "The water in spring rises to a high level and floods our lands, pastures and everything, and this polluted water is put on our land. I lost a good cow, and no doubt it was caused by this. Water lies there until May and June, and I spoke to Mr. McClellan about it. I told him that he should not keep the water back like that. I looked at the water last Saturday, and it looked like coal dust and oil mixed. This is caused by the C.G.E. works, the Brinton carpet factory and the Gas Works running their refuse into the river. Mr. Roberts lost three horses, and the cause was traced to this. Ev was 10 ft. in the bed of the stream and 8 ft. 4 in. on the sill. My farm is situated about ten miles below this city."

Mr. Wm. Doyell, Reeve of Otonabee addressed the Council. "I might state that this matter is being taken up in our Township Councils as well as generally," he said. "I lost four head of horses last fall, and I live about 8 1-2 miles below the city. The animals drank the water all the way through December and January, and then died, the cause of death being traced directly to this cause. The disease acted upon them the same as the typhoid acts upon the human being. On a foggy evening in the summertime you can't stand the smell of the water. When the water began to recede in the spring, as it receded, there was a ridge left, and when this was about four feet wide, I happened to be down on the shore one day, and there was a black scum left on the grass, and this was covered by green flies, and the smell was terrible. If anthrax developed on my farm I would not count it half as valuable as it is now. That disease can scarcely be gotten rid of. The animals may be burned, and yet it will break out again. There are about ten acres of my farm wy year the water is held back. The government only claims 8 ft. on the sill at Hastings and last spring there covered by this water in the spring, and there is a sort of scum all over the land. I feel quite sure that if the citizens of Peterborough were to take a vote on this, that two thirds of them would vote to have the sewage taken out of the river. I think we are justified in asking you to take out the sewage. We regret that Mr. Jos. Porter, the secretary o fthe deputation which went to Toronto, and Mr. Porter of Otonabee, who was chairman of the deputation, are absent, for they could have told you more about it."

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Huggins, who both live near the foregoing speakers, corroborated their statements, and were entirely in sympathy with the claim.

Mr. Norman Breckenridge stated that the people all along the river had been taking out ice and using the water, and he did not think that it was very nice to have the sewage running into the water. He was of the opinion that means should be taken to have it disposed of in some other way.

Ald. Duncan was rather disposed to agree with the farmers in their claim to a certain extent. He stated that it was disgraceful the condition the water was in. He also expressed his opinion that the farmers were perfectly

A CREDIT TO BOTH.

The steady and continuous advancement of the City of Peterborough to its position as the commercial centre of the Midland District, its growth and development in every branch of industrial and mercantile interest are manifested in many ways. A great city is not built in a day, nor is it the growth of a night. It is a development of years and the result of a combination of advantages made available by enterprise. These essentials Peterborough possesses in a large degree. Each year adds to the supply and each decade reveals the results of their development. In these modern days there is no better index to prosperity than the development of the telephone service of the city and district. In this respect Peterborough shows a very prominent preeminence. During the past year the Bell Telephone Company has made Peterborough the headquarters of the Midland district for both its Operating and Plant Departments, and has opened offices here for the handling of business from this point. Mr. F. W. Doan, who has well earned promotion by his energy in the local development of the Company's business, has been appointed District Superintendent of the Commercial Department, and Mr. A. A. Smith, District Plant Chief. Peterborough exchange, which has increased at an unusual rate during the past five years, has been functionalized, the commercial end being in the hand of a Local Manager and the plant in charge of a Local Plant Chief. These changes making Peterborough the centre of the District have a further importance, as they mean a considerable increase in the office employees, as well as making this City headquarters for foremen and cablemen employed in the territory, which will still further increase with the growth of the business.

As remarked, the enlargement of the Bell Telephone Company's Peterborough exchange during the past five years has been phenomenal. In 1904 the Company had 523 subscribers with very few rural connections. Now the Company has here an exchange of 1375 subscribers of which 143 are farmers, and the rate of increase of subscribers is to-day greater than ever before. During this period the Company has erected a handsome and substantial office and exchange building which from present indications will soon have to be enlarged. For the prosperity and outlook which this development discloses, both the City and the Company are to be congratulated.

"REFORMED" SPELLING.

The Examiner has the honour of acknowledging the receipt of the following

The Schoolmasters' Club of London, Ont., is an organization of all the professors and male teachers of the University, Normal school, Collegiate Institute, Public Schools and Business College. At its annual meeting on the 14th of February, after the discussion of a paper on the Improvement of Spelling a resolution was adopted in the following terms

The Schoolmasters' Club desires to express to the publishers of the journals of this city its approval of their practice of spelling words as "labor," "governor," "honor," etc., with the "or" ending and further begs to suggest that they take steps to introduce approved simplifications and improvement of the spelling of some common words for example, "program," catalog," "tho," "altho," "thoro," "thoroly," "meter," "center," "theater."

Accompanying this was an invitation to join the Ontario Branch of the British "Simplified Spelling Society" of Great Britain. The Examiner after a somewhat varied experience with stenographic graduates, is decidedly in favour of the "improvement" of spelling. But improvement must be improvement, not simply mutilation. The English language is a language by itself in more ways than one. It is the result of the philological development of centuries. The history of the English language is the history of the English race, and its history is very largely expressed in its spelling. With all its anomolous and deficient orthography, it possesses a character expressed in its spelling, as the face of a strong man is a reflection of the big mind behind it. If we simplify English spelling in the crude way proposed we shall take the character and expression out of its face. If we reduce it to the level of Choctaw—by eliminating its etymological and historical character, we shall reduce it to the level of a jargon. The English language, as it stands, in significance, spelling, etc., is the development of centuries. It has been subject to changes, but these have been gradual and practically insensible; with te sanction and example of competent and recognized authority; not the ready-made improvements of self-constituted "reformers operating with a cleaver. The spelling "reformers" of London the Less, applaud the city newspapers for adopting the mutilated spelling of English. They make an unfortunate selection; for the press of the present day, especially the daily press, is unfortunately a potent and prolific source of deterioration of English. This is not from choice or animus, or lack of literary skill, but of necessity. Writing for the daily press has to be done under such tremendous pressure, that the production of clear, concise, methodical and well-arranged English is impossible. Newspapers, necessarily and inevitably do enough harm in this way without adding the mutilation of our spelling beyond all recognition of its family features. It is to be noted that the employment of the "reformed" spelling, in which in defiance of recognized authority, each "reformer" becomes a law unto himself, begets other impulses to corruption, and the way to the employment of the most vicious of language corruption, "slang" is made easy; and as in the world of civil life, defiance and disregard of recognized authority bring looseness, and deterioration into existence with evil facility. The British constitution, is a gradual evolution, step by step, without violence or plunging. The same applies to the English language. It is susceptible of improvement in orthography and otherwise, but this improvement, to be real improvement, must come as the improvements of the past have come, gradually, and through the medium of recognized literary and philological authority.

EDITORIAL NOTES

If any Liberal back bencher in Parliament wishes to be classified as "one of the strongest men in the Liberal party," he has only to express a little dissent from reciprocity.

Conservative newspapers take Liberal members portraits out of the "rogues' gallery" and give them prominence on the "first page" if they show the slightest glint of independence. A Liberal member who was yesterday "a grafter" and "a pal of a gang of thieves," a "dunderhead" and "fraud," becomes a shining light, a statesman, an angel of light, "one of the strongest men in the party," if he will only say a few words in opposition to free barley or free fruit.

"HOMMAGE."

(Ottawa Free Press.)

From Mr. Henri Bourassa the Free Press has received a copy of the pamphlet which he has published, containing seven articles from his pen which have appeared in his paper, Le Devoir, the Nationalist organ, on the reciprocity question, translated into English. Upon the cover of the copy for which the Free Press makes its acknowledgments to Mr. Bourassa, upon the words "Hommage de l'auteur," stamped with a rubber stamp, these words, which the equivalent of "With the author's compliments," are a reminder that Mr. Justice Girouard, as Administrator at Ottawa during the Governor-General's expedition to Hudson Bay last year, sent a polite telegraph message of welcome to Cardinal Vannutelli, on arrival of the latter in Canada, as representative of the Pope at the Eucharistic Congress, in which message the word "hommage" was used. Some people regarded that message as signifying a traitorous paying to the Pope of the "homage" due to the King. If the word meant that, then Mr. Bourassa must be regarded as prostrating himself, like a vassal. These words which are the equivalent of the Free Press and of every other paper and person to whom he has sent a copy of his pamphlet with his compliments rubber-stamped on the cover

Huron Conservatives Declare In Favour Of Reciprocity

Farmers See a Better Market For Their Stock and Are Organizing To Protect Their Own Interests—"Getting Our Eyes Opened," Says Reeve of Tuckersmith—No Fear of Injuring Railways Which Cannot Keep Pace With Expansion of Trade—Party Stalwarts Speak Up For Farmer.

(Toronto Star Correspondence)

SEAFORTH, March 3.—Lifelong Conservatives, who know that the value of their farms will be enhanced by the reciprocity agreement, are one by one determined to sacrifice party for principle, and are declaring for freer trade. In Huron county, where the Star's investigator has been interviewing agriculturists, not a single Conservative farmer who was asked his opinion came out flatly against the trade pact. A few hesitated to espouse it in a public interview, but others spoke out boldly in its favour.

Joseph Atkinson, of Tuckersmith, well-known as a Conservative, was one of those who expressed confidence in the result. "I think," he said, "that it will benefit practically everything the farmer sells." George Layton, another Conservative agriculturist, gave it as his opinion that "the agreement will give us a better market for cattle and hogs. And I hear other Conservatives saying the same thing," he added.

The farmers of Huron do not take seriously the blue-ruin-for-horses prediction of ex-Minister of Agriculture Nelson Monteith. They say that there may be less demand for the poorer class of horses, which are more plentiful in the States, but that the market for the finer horses will be improved, "and," commented one authority, "those are the horses that we should breed, and there is more money in them anyway."

"Our eyes are opened and we are organizing," was a significant comment on the situation which was heard in Seaforth, where the hostile attitude of certain interests was being discussed by a group of farmers.

It is said that the Goderich line of the G. T. R. has been as profitable a piece of railway as the Grand Trunk has ever owned. This is not only because of the lake trade from Goderich itself, nor wholly on account of the brisk passenger service which is engendered by the busy towns of this prosperous district. To these factors have been added the profits from unusually heavy shipments of stock. The district is famous for its agricultural richness, and the railway lines which tap it have shared in the general prosperity.

In the country are bred many of the better class of horses for which the reciprocity agreement would provide a larger market. A Huron Old Boy, Mr. Joseph Dorrance, visited this district the other day and shipped out to the North-west a load of horses—eighteen or twenty of them—which must have cost him between four and five thousand dollars. This shipment, which was consigned to High View, Sask., was composed of heavy colts, not one of which was a year old; yet the prices paid averaged well over $200. The argument that the West will be flooded by "cheap and nasty" American horses is rather discounted by the fact that the Westerner at present wants the very best horses which Canada produces. These indeed, are also in demand in the United States, and farmers hereabouts believe that the horse market will be improved rather than otherwise when the trade pact becomes law.

A Trio Approve it.

Reeve Robt. McKay and Clerk D. F. MacGregor, of Tuckersmith, were talking about reciprocity in Seaforth yesterday, when they were joined by another well-known farmer, Mr. Jas. Martin.

"Yes, it will be a good thing," said the reeve. "It will benefit our grain market most. It should also mean a better market for hogs and lambs, and there are more of them shipped out of here than out of most places."

"It will steady the markets for general farm produce," was the opinion expressed by the clerk. "It will give us across to New York and Boston. It may interfere with our trade in the poorer class of horses, but it should mean an improved demand for the better class, and, after all, there is more money in them."

"So far as I can see, that agreement is all right," asserted Mr. Martin, heartily.

"But how would the farmers vote?" asked another member of the group. "People say that the manufacturer will always vote for his pocket, and the farmer for his party."

"That's just about right," agreed the reeve, "but the farmers are getting their eyes opened in this very county. We have organized a farmers' club just recently. No, I do not run across farmers who are opposed to the reciprocity agreement."

They All Approve.

Peter McKay, of Tuckersmith, also expressed approval of the agreement when interviewed by The Star. "I like it pretty well," he said. "It will help the farmers considerably in dray and heavy horses. I have been farming long enough to have had considerable experience with free trade, and I used to find a good market for the better class of horses, especially when the duty was off registered mares. Of course, we are not likely to ship much hay from this neighbourhood, but the farmers along the border will find it profitable to do so."

"I tell you what it is," declared Alex. Mustard, who has a sawmill and a farm near Brucefield. "I believe that reciprocity will add $1,000 to every farm in Ontario. I am satisfied that it will benefit every farmer. I don't see any advantage in seeking markets a thousand miles away, when the best markets of the world is right at our doors. At no time in our history have we sold so largely to the Americans as we do to-day, and at no time have we been so loyal to Great Britain; so that is all this annexation talk amounts to. As for railways being injured by freer trade, I believe that trade is expanding faster than railways can be built."

Heaping Up the Testimony.

James Cowan, the owner of a 200-acre farm just outside of Seaforth, characterized the trade agreement as "all right. And it is especially all right for the farmer," he added. "It will open up a market for us, and I think it will a benefit to us in stock of all kinds, but especially in thoroughbred stock."

George McKee of Winthrop is a Conservative, and he hesitated to express an opinion on the general aspects of reciprocity. "It is a big question," he said. "As affecting the farmer, however, I think it may improve his conditions. It is better for him than for anyone else, as it will give him better outlets for his produce."

Fred Waldron, another agriculturist, expressed himself as keen for reciprocity. "What do I think of it?" he repeated: "I think we need it. It will afford us a wider market for our products. I contend," he added, "that the more the matter is studied the farmer supports everyone. There are other producers, of course; the mines, for instance. But the farmer is the most essential producer, because he produces food and raiment. The country may do without gold, but it must have food. Thus, when through any kind of legislation the food supply is restricted, you affect the whole population. It all simmers down to the fact that other classes are depending upon the farmers, and that the farmers' prosperity is reflected throughout the whole commercial life of any country."

Mr. Waldron's testimony is that of a farmer of wide experience. He has grown bananas in Nicaragua, and has also farmed in the Canadian West.

Conservatives Like it.

There was nothing grudging in the tribute to the reciprocity which was offered by Farmer Joseph Atkinson. "I think it will benefit practically everything the farmer sells. It won't hurt the markets for good horses. I am a Conservative myself, but I find that men of both parties are in favour of the agreement."

Hugh MacGregor, a lifelong Conservative, showed the natural hesitation of a man who has consistently followed his party. He would not express public approval of the tariff changes from a general viewpoint, he said, as "taking all things into consideration, I don't know how it would work out, and I don't think anyone else does." But his significant statement, from the viewpoint of a cultivator of the soil, was this: "I think it will help the farmer, all right. I think it will help me. It will provide a better market for my stock. I think that in a general way the farmer will have a better market."

Hogs and Cattle.

George Layton, another Conservative farmer, was more enthusiastic in his approval. "The agreement is all right," he said. "I do not think it will do very much for our butter and eggs, but for our hogs and cattle it will. I think it will give us a better market for them. And I hear other Conservatives saying the same thing."

To this testimony may be added the moderate, but favourable comment of another Conservative yeoman. "As a whole, I don't believe what the effect will be," said Arthur Stevenson. "In some things it certainly seems favourable to the farmer, especially for our grain."

The Star man heard of many other Conservatives in favour of the pact, whom it was impossible to reach. Robert Scarlett, of McKillop, a Conservative of some prominence, is being freely quoted in approval of the measure, but he declined to commit himself. In Seaforth the agreement seemes to have received rather less attention than in some other towns, but in the country round about it is being discussed daily. There is no doubt as to the general verdict. It is emphatically in favour of free trade in natural products.

It is summed up very neely by J. J. Irvine, of Leadbury, who was described by a friend as "not merely a Conservative; a real Tory." In his spare moments Mr. Irvine writes for the newspapers, and this is how he declares himself on the tariff issue

Let Borden Listen.

"The fellow whose hobby is loyalty to the mother country is now getting in his pick. Why, bless his simple heart and shallow pate, the parents, especially when they live a distance from the children, like to have the latter act neighbourly with their nearest neighbours; that is, if they will act decent. And if our big neighbour refuses to do what is right we can cut his company any moment as far as trade matters are concerned."

"The reciprocity agreement is just fine." Our manufacturers have nothing to complain about, and the farming community who have given the matter proper consideration should be delighted. They still have the Old Country markets for their grain, and the great cities of the United States are sure markets for their hay, potatoes, etc. The free interchange of fruit will also be a great boon, the Yankee fruit being earlier than ours. We hope the measure will be agreed to on both sides of the line without a division."

Is Mr. Borden listening?

Bungling At Hanging Forced Government To Appoint Radcliffe

HANGED PIRATES

TORONTO, MARCH 1.—Many stories have been related about Radcliffe, the hangman, who died on Sunday, not a few of which had a basis of truth. This much is true that as hangman he knew his business, and endeavoured to send the victims of the Crown out of this world as expeditiously and as painlessly as was humanely possible.

Almost everybody knows that it is the duty of the sheriff to execute all persons who have been condemned to death. Sheriffs almost from time immemorial have shirked this part of their task, and for many years when some unfortunate had been found guilty of a capital crime, the penalty of which was death, the high official engaged some derelict to perform the unpleasant task for him. This duty was performed very indifferently, but the climax was reached at the execution of a bookkeeper in Guelph named Harvey. This poor man had been rather well brought up, and his salary did not prove sufficient to support the family in the manner in which they thought they should live. Harvey, in a moment of weakness, expropriated some of his employer's money, and to cover it up falsified the books. One step led to another, and as time went on he became more and more involved. He learned that an accounting was to be made, and being a highly-strung man, he felt that he could not stand the disgrace of exposure, and loving his family, he felt that it would be wrong to leave them to bear the brunt of it. He first visited a hardware store, purchased a revolver and a supply of cartridges and returned home and killed his wife. He then repaired to the public school and asked for his two young daughters. The children, one on either arm of the distracted man, accompanied him to the home, where he deliberately killed them both. Subsequently he telephoned to his son, who had a clerkship in an office in Toronto, to meet him on the arrival of the Guelph train on his way to this city when the tragedy was discovered, and the police of Guelph communicated with Toronto and when Harvey stepped off the train at the Union Station he was accosted by a detective instead of his son. He was subsequently tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. There was no doubt in the minds of the authorities that Harvey intended to kill his son and complete the chapter by committing suicide.

Hanging of Harvey.

The scene at the hanging of poor Harvey at Guelph jail was one of the most gruesome in the annals of Canadian justice. A farm labourer, whose identity was not revealed, officiated. When the platform dropped the noose slipped, and the condemned man was in the throes of strangulation for fully twenty-five minutes before death put a period to his sufferings. Following this travesty a cry went up from one end of the Dominion to the other, and the advocates of the abolition of capital punishment gained many adherents. So loud was the outcry that the Dominion Government was forced to take cognizance of it, with the result that a permanent hangman was appointed at a salary of $800 per year, with the stipulation that for each hanging he was to receive from the sheriff the usual fee and all his travelling and other expenses. The identity of the expert selected was not revealed.

How Identity was Revealed.

Shortly after the appointment of an official hangman the Birchall case loomed large in the public eye, and it remained for a Toronto reporter, who subsequently went much higher in the scale, to solve the mystery. From his own private source of information he ascertained that a big florid man, at that time acting as caretaker for the Sunnyside club, was in all probability the man. He took a night off from his office, met the man in question, and not only induced him to talk, but in some occult manner obtained his photograph. This he used, together with the details he had secured at the proper time in the Birchall case. It was in this way that Radcliffe was made known to the public. He admitted to the reporter in question that he had assisted in public hangings in England before coming to this country.

Hanged Chinese Pirates.

It is said that at one time in his chequered career he was a sailor in the China seas. The boat that Radcliffe was engaged on had a lot to do in capturing Chinese pirates, who were hanged from the yardarm. The work, as a rule, was of a bungling character, entailing much suffering, and Radcliffe, who was a kind-hearted man, revolted against the work, and being a good sailor, he showed the executors how a knot could be tied that would make death almost instantaneous. This story lacks verification.

Radcliffe's first important hanging was that of Birchall, although it is pretty well known that he officiated as the executioner at hangings in Canada prior to this event. Strange as his occupation may have been, the official hangman was a genial and convival man. He regarded a hanging as all in the day's work, and did not feel that he should be regarded as a man apart on account of his carrying out the injunctions of the law in as humane a manner as he knew.

Stefloff the Macedonian murderer, who was executed in Toronto jail, was the last man that Radcliffe hanged. It is said that prior to the hanging of an Italian in the jail at North Bay Radcliffe received a "Black Hand" letter threatening him with death if he carried out the execution. The letter is said to have broken the iron nerve of the sturdy hangman. This much is true that Ellis, not Radcliffe, carried out the Crown's decree at North Bay.

The true story is probably that told by his aged mother, who had a deep affection for him. "My son," she said, "died as the result of drinking bad water in the Northwest. It brought out a rash on him, and with that came a spinal cord affection. He was ill seven months."

Radcliffe was born in Birmingham, England 56 years ago. He had a wife, son and daughter in the Old Country and a son and two daughters in this city. So soon as his occupation became known he was practically ostracized, save by a few kindred spirits, who admired him because he was a liberal spender in bar-rooms.

By a coincidence, Mr Justice Mac-Mahon, who imposed the death sentence on Birchall; Mr. James Forbes, turnkey at the jail at Woodstock, who had charge of the death watch on the condemned man, and Radcliffe who pulled the fatal bolt that ushered Birchall into fraternity, have all died within the present year.

Radcliffe, the hangman, was a strange character.

Outside his home, when he was on the way "to do a job" as he called it, Radcliffe was all that was low and brutal.

At home he was quiet, a good conversationalist, well read, neat and clean and very kind. He was the loved playmate of many children in the Parkdale district, and although the parents did not associate with him they knew that their children were safe from all harm when Radcliffe was at home.

It was a familiar sight to see the hangman coming down the street surrounded by a dozen or so children and carrying a baby on each arm. Latterly, when he lived alone, he would take care of the babies on the street when the mothers made their trips to the city.

On the other hand, Radcliffe has been known to take the buttons out of a murderer's collar to keep as souvenirs, and he had in his possession for years a piece of the rope on which Birchall swung. He took a special delight in preparing the rope for a hanging to just get it the right length, and have it just 'taut enough' to use his own expression.

Radcliffe had travelled all over the world as a sailor. He was the son of an English clergyman and graduated as a pharmacist. He kept a drug store for some time in England, and then took to the sea.

Coming to Canada in 1885 he took the position of steward of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club. He was an excellent cook, and delighted in preparing most delicious course dinners, a trick he could turn right up until the last couple of years.

Radcliffe was paid a standing salary by the department of justice of $1,080 per annum. Besides this he received all expenses of travelling, mileage, and was the recipient of fees from the different sheriffs for whom he officiated.

When questioned about the position Radcliffe never wanted to talk on the subject at all.

To the writer one day he confided that the job was killing him, and that he was sorry for all the men he had killed for a living.

"But," he said, "someone had to do it, and I reason that I am the Minister of Justice of the Dominion of Canada when I officiate at a hanging. The department of justice has to go on, and I am no more culpable than Hon. Mr. Aylesworth."

Radclive was the real name of the hangman. He was commonly known as Radcliffe, but this was not correct.

justified in making their claim. He said that a canoe or any sort of boat was coated with scum after running through the water. He was in favour of a septic tank.

Ald. Metheral thought that the water should be analyzed down about ten or fifteen miles, and at different points in the river to see what it is like. His opinion met with favour.

Ald. Graham thought that if the oil and grease from the manufacturing establishments was stopped running into the river, it would stop a lot of the trouble.

Ald. Buller suggested to the farmers that there might be some weed on the farm to cause the death of the animals. They emphatically denied this.

The Mayor then advised the delegation of farmers, that the case would be thoroughly investigated, and that as soon as the desired information was gotten, he would let them know. He told them that the water would be tested at different points in the river and at different times in the season. The points in the river ranging from eight to ten miles down. He stated that it was a serious matter for the city, and that it would take some time to investigate, and consider the matter to see what to do. But he stated positively that something would be done.

Moved by Ald. Edgar, seconded by Ald. Anderson, that the Peterborough Light and Power Co., be forced to run the refuse from their gas plant some place else, other than in the river.—Carried.

It was moved and seconded that the water be tested from eight to ten miles down the river, beginning in April, and that a sample of it be sent to the Provincial Laboratory, in Toronto.—Carried.

Dr. McPherson drew the attention of the committee to the fact that the new hospital was practically ready, and that there were a number of patients ready to go in to it, and that there was no nurses. Ald. Graham moved, seconded by Ald. Metheral, that the matter of securing nurses be left with the Board of Management, and that they also have the power to secure any additional help required.—Carried.

A number of other questions came up, but were left over to be discussed at the meeting of the Council on Monday night.

Golden Text—Enoch walked with God; and he was not; for God took him. Gen. v:24.

(1.) Verse 1—Where is heaven?

(2.) Is heaven a place or a condition only?

(3.) It is possible here for two to live in the same house, and in the same outward circumstances, one enjoying heaven and the other suffering the pangs of hell; will the same thing be possible in the future life? Why?

(5.) Did Elijah's material body enter heaven?

(6.) Has Jesus got a material body in heaven?

(7.) Has God got a material body? Give your reasons?

(8) Verses 2-8—Why did Elijah act as if he wanted to get rid of the company of Elisha?

(9.) Why would it not be right, or in good taste, for a man of God to-day, when he is starting for a particular place to say like Elisha "the Lord hath sent me?" (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(10.) What qualities did Elisha display in refusing to leave Elijah? (See verses 2, 4, 6, 9.)

(11.) What is the chief reason for men being failures?

(12.) Did Elisha know that his master was going to heaven, in the near future, and if so how did he learn of it?

(13.) Why did God choose Elisha for Elijah's successor?

(14.) What reason, if any, is there to believe that a man of God, will never fail to get the position and do the work, which God has planned for him?

(15.) Are there any such things as chance, or luck in attaining distinction with God? Why?

(16.) When we are called of God to a work are there any circumstances which will justify us in giving it up? Why?

(17.) What led Elijah from place to place, and did he probably know his final destination?

(18.) What is it that leads a true Christian, from place to place, or, from one thing to another?

(19.) Verses 9-10—What prompted Elijah to ask Elisha what he should give him?

(20.) What did Elisha request, and what did it mean?

(21.) Which is the greater practical blessing to give or to receive? Why?

(22.) When you make your supreme wish what is it?

(23.) How may we impart to others the good qualities we possess?

(24.) Verses 11-12—Is there any way to explain Elijah's translation to heaven other than by miracle?

(25.) Verses 13-18—To-day there is no more charm, or wonder working power, in the garment of a good man than of a man not good, how then do you explain the power in Elijah's mantle?

(26.) Suppose the miraculous part of this narrative should not be historical how should that effect your faith in the essentials of Christianity?

PERTINENT PARAGRAPHS

BY SIMPLE SIMON

March came in like a lion. Let us hope it will maintain its traditional reputation and march out like a lamb.

The Yellow Peril is in China. Peterborough intends it to endure there judging from the meagre amount subscribed to the Famine fund by the citizens. By the way, might not the churches devote a Sunday offertory to the fund.

Mr. Studholme's bill for an eight hour day, and a minimum wage of 20 cents an hour (in which he naively excepts agricultural labour) if it becomes law will more than likely increase the already stupendous problem of procuring hired help on the farm. With such elysian conditions within his reach what hired man is going to work from dawn till dark for 75 cents a day, more or less as the lawyers say?

The latest cerebral disorder—annexomania.

To reciprocate, or not to reciprocate. That is the question. Shakespeare up-to-date.

When reciprocity becomes an established fact, no doubt many of those who now rave against it will be falling over themselves in their haste to claim credit for its inception.

Some of them dubbed it a shameful atrocity.
But their views were reduced to a ludicrous jumble
By the sapient diction of staunch Mr. D——e.

The firemen have been granted an increase of wages to come into effect on April 1st. What? The date? Umph. Yes, just so.

The aviation cap is advertised in a local establishment. I presume the wearer may be excused if he sometimes appears to be 'up in the clouds.

Two new officers added to the police force. The sight of a policeman patrolling the streets will not be such a rare occurrence as heretofore.

The letter on reciprocity by "Working-man" in last Tuesday's Examiner is an apt illustration of the old proverb about "the pot calling the kettle black," for after arraigning the opponents of the measure for their selfish motives, he goes on to give ultra-selfish reasons for supporting it, and winds up with the delightfully egotistical expression "my interests ——are the best interests of the country."

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"A STUBBORN CINDERELLA."

"A Stubborn Cinderella," the Adams Hough and Howard musical comedy at the Grand Opera House last night proved a very entertaining and enjoyable production, filled with tuneful music and amusing comedy, well interpreted by a capable cast of principals and chorus. The costumes and scenic investure were sumptuous and the presentation thoroughly up to the minute in every way, going through with a snap and vim that kept the audience in a happy mood. Like all Howard shows the score is tuneful, if a little reminiscent, and of a nature easily whistled, and the songs were very well received, three and four encores being demanded in some cases some of the best were "When You First Kiss the Last Girl You Love," "Don't Be Cross With Me," "Love Me Just Because," and "Don't Teach Me to Swim Alone." Cort Albertson as "Mac" had the principal male part and did ample justice to a good role. Miss Hazel Kirk proved a very winsome and accomplished prima donna, her voice being sweet and powerful and her acting clever and free from affectation. Lillian Goldsmith was a dainty little soubrette who sang her numbers with a refreshing vim and who danced delightfully. The other principals were worthy of the stars and the chorus sang and danced well. The production on the whole was well worth seeing.

MISS VESTA VICTORIA TRAVELS IN A HANDSOME CAR

Twenty thousand dollars is a large sum of money, but this is the amount paid by Miss Vesta Victoria for the rental of the specially constructed steel Pullman car innovation which has been lately turned out of that company's factory. The car was originally intended for the use of Miss Mary Garden, but was abandoned by her when Miss Victoria offered nearly twice the amount of money for the use of it.

The car contains a specially built compartment, thirty feet in length, in which there is a grand piano, and a lately patented mechanical appliance for securing perfect acoustics. A novel device of felt and other noise deadening materials insures almost complete silence in the car, even when it is rattling along at high speed. To one unacquainted with this method of procuring freedom from noise, the effect of riding in the car is almost uncanny.

In these luxurious surroundings Miss Victoria practices her new songs. She is accompanied by Roy Barton, the famous Dublin pianist, and the tedium of many a long journey is broken for her large company by the daily parties given by Miss Victoria.

Surrounding Miss Victoria on her Canadian tour are a number of players of international fame, among them being Ivanoski, the Russian pianist; Van Camp, a Holland psychic with a wonderful repertoire of East Indian necromancy; Frank Bush, unquestionably one of the wittiest story tellers the United States has produced; Johnny Ford, a celebrated eccentric dancer; The Church City Quartette, four melodists, whose home is in New Zealand, and who have gained world's fame for their singing; the Maclaren Family, five Scotch musicians, whose selections are novel and wonderfully well played, and the celebrated Australian prima donna, Tillie Terriss.

GRANGE FORMED BY FARMERS OF OTONABEE

Enthusiastic Meeting Was Held at Stewart's Hall, Otonabee---Messrs. G. F. Marsh and Chas. C. Nixon, of Peterborough, Were the Organizers Present.

The forward movement of organized agriculture took root in a tangible manner in Peterborough County last night when the farmers at Stewart's Hall, Otonabee, met and organized themselves into a grange. Messrs. G. F. Marsh, of Canadian Horticulturist, and Chas. Nixon, of the Farm and Dairy staff, addressed the meeting and did the work of organizing.

After hearing the addresses of the speakers it was decided by those present that they should organize a grange. The names of those who would join were taken. The others retired from the hall, after which the members were made acquainted with the ritual and the officers were installed. The officers are; Worthy Master, S. Matchett; Lecturer, W. Simson; secretary-treasurer, Livingston Stewart; Overseer ,Bruce Savigny.

The wonderful organization of the Grange amongst the farmers of New York State and throughout the United States where the farmers, over 1,000,000 strong, are united in this organization, was explained by Mr. Marsh, who is now the editor of The Canadian Horticulturist, and who for the past five years has been the agriculturist and horticulturist on the Pennsylvania Railroad with his headquarters at Elmira, N.Y. He traced the Grange movement from its early history and told of the great power for good that the Grange was in New York where every bill affecting the farmers in any way, before it was submitted to the Legislature at Albany was first submitted to the Grange.

The remodelled Grange of Ontario and some sidelights on the tariff question as it affects farmers, were taken up by Mr. Nixon, editor of Farm and Dairy. He pointed out, how protection had 'gone to seed' and instanced by specific reference to the cotton combine, the wire fence combine, and the vehicle wheel combine, how it pressed unduly burdensome upon the farmer. He explained the educational, social and influential work of the Grange as we now have it in Ontario, and made it clear to his hearers how the Grange is the only organization through which farmers can effectively make themselves heard and secure their rights.

The next meeting is to be called at Stewart's Hall on Tuesday night, March 14th. The meeting will be an open one ,to which all in the neighbourhood, ladies especially, will be invited. The working of the Grange will then be further explained and on a conclusion of the meeting others will be given the opportunity to join in the Grange, which promises to be of great material value to the farmers in their fight for their interests and rights.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES OF COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

Prizes for Prowess in School Work and in Athletics Were Presented to Successful Pupils Last Night---Enjoyable Programme was Rendered.

The annual commencement exercises of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute were held last night in the assembly hall.

The programme opened with an excellent chorus, given by the Collegiate Glee Club, after which Mr. John Crane, chairman of the Board of Education, took the chair. During the course of his opening remarks he took occasion to welcome the large gathering present as guests of the staff and students, and also spoke a few words of appreciation for the interest taken in the school by the citizens.

The presentation of the Nicholls Scholarship, by Mr. D. Walker, B. A., then took place. Mr. Walker referred to the origin of the prizes as being expressive of the sentiments of one who desired to leave a fitting memorial, of the donor's desire to leave something that would prove an incentive for the promotion of higher education. The speaker thought that Peterborough had been a little late in recognizing the needs of better educational facilities, consequently they would have to put forth greater effort to promote the cause of educational progress. The prize winners were as follows

Faculty entrance, Part II., $20.00—Miss M. Anderson

Junior Matriculation, $15.00—Ray Scott.

Honour Matriculation, $20.00—Miss G. Yeomey.

A song by Mr. H. Morphet was the next item on the programme and, needless to say, it was excellently rendered.

A pleasing feature of the evening was an address by Mr. McCaig, formerly of the Collegiate staff, now Superintendent of Edmonton schools. Mr. McCaig referred to the excellent organization now prevalent, in spite of the fact that the building of these institutions make such big demands on the public. In the next ten years we will have to double the expenditure. We are educating the generation of to-day to live up to the social demands that will be required of them fifty years hence. He regretted that higher education was not more universal in this country.

A reading by Mrs. L. J. Pettit was the next time, which carried off high honours and was also heartily encored.

The presentation of the Canadian Club prizes were then made by Dr. G. S. Cameron, President of the Canadian Club.

In his opening remarks the speaker said that the training which our students were getting were too limited. He hoped that the day would soon be here when technical and trades' schools would be more common, so that every boy so inclined would be enabled to receive a practical training in their respective trades. He also referred to the good work done by the Canadian Club, from an educational point of view, such as the interesting and instructive addresses which the Club has been favoured with this winter, by prominent speakers. The prize-winners of the Canadian Club prizes are as follows

Senior Lower School—1. Miss L. Scott, 2. Miss G Stevenson

Honourable Mention—L. Thorne.

Junior Lower School—1. Miss O. Marshall; 2. Miss G Fife

Honourable Mention—W Carruthers

The next item on the programme was an especially pleasing instrumental duet, by Miss B Giroux, and Miss K O'Brien, which was greatly appreciated, after which Mr. G. A. Ferguson, B.A., of the Collegiate staff, presented the Athletic prizes. He spoke favourably of the various participants in these contests. Following is a revised list of the most prominent winners:

Senior Championship, Staff Cup and Medal—Harold Hill.

Athletic Form Prize: Form 3 c.

Senior Road Race Medal—C. Fusee.

Junior Road Race Medal—M. Carlisle.

Next came the presentation of the "writing medal" by Mr. John Crane, the winner being Miss Stella Sherwin.

And last, but not least, was the valedictory address, which was very beautifully rendered by Miss K. Burnett. The meeting then closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

CLUBS ARE BENEFICIAL TO THE COMMUNITY

Affirmative Won Last Night's Debate on the Subject at St. Alphonsus Lyceum---Some Clever Speeches by the Representatives of Both Sides.

The regular meeting of the St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society was held on Friday evening at St. Alphonsus' Lyceum. Miss M. Kelly presided and although the programme was short, it was good, consisting of Piano duet—Misses Delaire and Tangney.

Vocal solo—Mr. Jos. Mercier.

The debate "Resolved that Clubs are beneficial to a community," came next, and was exceedingly interesting and well contested. The affirmative was taken by Miss Gertrude Day and Miss Irene Gibson, while the negative was upheld by Miss Eileen Coughlin and Miss Ethel Hayes.

Miss Day, the leader of the affirmative, was the first speaker. She dwelt, particularly on the good influences the Club has on the man and the boy. In every club there are men who are on a higher plane than others, morally, intellectually and physically. These men, naturally, exert a powerful influence on their less fortunate brethren, and thus there is an interchange of ideas. Nearly all clubs have a supply of the best magazines, newspapers and periodicals. The members read the articles contained therein, and their ideas and minds are broadened and elevated. Miss Day called the attention of the audience to the fact that if Clubs were not beneficial the best and brightest minds of all classes of society would not waste their valuable time, attending such places. As examples she named Edison, Marconi, Taft, Whitney and Laurier. Clubs have existed, not only during the Christian era, but also in pagan times, and had they not been of use to the race they would have died out ages ago, but they have assumed gigantic proportions and we know that only the fittest survive.

Miss Coughlin, the leader of the negative, then made a very eloquent speech. She said that all clubs, not only those devoted to education, but also those devoted to sport, must be considered. The many sporting clubs have done a great deal towards making gamblers of men. Men, led on by the excitement of the races, often risk, not only their own fortunes, but the fortunes of others, which have been entrusted to them, lose all and eventually commit suicide. She also said that if men frequent the club, the home is naturally neglected, and compared the gay, reckless life of Andrea del Sarto with the lives of Raphael and Michael Angelo. The latter, who lived retired, were devoted to study, and their pictures have inspiration, which Andrea del Sarto's lack.

Miss Gibson, who spoke next, emphasized the advantages of the club to the home. A club is like a huge family. If a member is in distress, the other members are interested in his welfare. Also, by their influence and financial assistance, Clubs are often the means of fostering men of genius and they assist them in giving to the world words which would otherwise never be known. They also exercise a powerful influence on the politics of the nation, for the club members discuss the questions of the day in a logical way, and thus influence voting. Miss Gibson also said that the members of many Clubs are brought into closer and better relations with the church, and are less likely to neglect their religious duties.

Miss Hayes, the last speaker, dwelt at some length on the bad effects of the club on the boy. The boy falls an easy victim to the temptations of the Club. He prefers a game of cards or the pool and billiard table on saturday night to church on Sunday morning, and is no this the first step towards gambling. She also pointed out the evils of Athletic Clubs, which are crooked limbs, eyes that see not, and a dwindling of the parental bank account. Miss Hayes concluded her speech by calling attention to the terrible consequences of club life in Paris, London, New York and some of our Canadian cities.

Miss Day was then given five minutes to reply and succeeded in knocking out several of the points, which had been brought forward by the other side. In fact, she was so successful in this that it was mainly her reply that decided the debate.

Father McColl, who was the judge, gave the decision in favour of the affirmative. He complimented all the speakers, especially the leaders, and stated that he had decided in favour of the negative until Miss Day's reply.

Father McCarthy announced that the next meeting would be on Friday evening, March 24th, when Father Fitzpatrick would lecture on Macbeth.

The meeting was then closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

The question is constantly being asked, "When are the new books to be placed on the shelves?" The answer is a very simple one and it is easily given. A short time ago the library board made out a list of books and for these tenders have been asked. At the present time nothing definite has been settled and the public are asked to wait patiently till the purchases have been made. But, although the new books have not put in an appearance there is heaps of good literature in the library for those who will look for it in the right way. There is many a book standing on the shelves that has never been taken out owing either to its forbidding title or to the illegibility of it. The only right way to go about getting a good book is to take it from the shelf and examine it. To illustrate what is meant an example can be taken from a set of Chambers' Miscellany, which has stood for years, patiently waiting to be examined and so far as can be seen, nobody has had the least wish or desire to look into one of the volumes. Yet, if anybody desirous of really interesting reading, some of it sensational enough to please the most eager seeker after excitement, would take the trouble to turn over a few of the pages, he would find something to suit his taste, and the great beauty of it is that none of it is vulgar. There is reading matter for the children as well as for the grown ups, and even if it is a trifle old in quality it is none the worse for that. We know that old wine is the best and the same is in a large measure true of books.

Next week the annual meeting of the Ontario Library Association (Lindsay district) will be held in the Peterborough Public Library. An extended notice of this will be given in these columns in due course. The meeting is to be held on Thursday, March 9th, and Dr. Locke, of the Toronto Public Library is to be one of the speakers.

TELEGRAPHY TROUBLES

The G. N. W. Must Await Award of Conciliation Board—To Maintain Statu Quo

THE SITUATION NOW

Toronto, March 4.—International President S. J. Konenkamp of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union left last night for Chicago, where he was hurriedly called to confer with federated labor leaders in the matter of the telephone operators of that city, who are seeking affiliation with the telegraphers' union.

As announced yesterday, the committee representing the majority of the Great Northwestern Co.'s telegraphers, applied for a board of conciliation under the Lemieux Act. This course was made necessary owing to the company's failure to meet the operators' representatives to discuss their grievances.

As provided for in the Lemieux Act, after application has been made to the Government for a board, a condition of statu quo will prevail between the contending parties, until a decision has been reached by the conciliators. This means, the men say, that the G.N.W. will be compelled to stop the summary measures they have been using in dismissing the men, at least for the time being.

T. W. Carroll, a high official of the Western Union, who was here last week, is credited with saying that while he did not like the idea of unions dictating their wage scales, that it was the policy of the Western Union to pay as good, if not better, wages than the opposition company. The G.N.W. bears the same relation to the Western Union as the C.P.R. does to the Postal or Mackay Company in the United States.

The local C.P.R. telegraphers are receiving from 15 to 20 per cent. higher wages than the G.N.W. men.

President Konenkamp will be back on Monday to complete the gathering of data which will be necessary when the board of conciliation meet.

Honors For Peary.

Washington, March 4.—The plans of the friends of Capt. R. E. Peary to secure Congressional recognition of his polar achievements progressed rapidly yesterday when the House by a vote of 154 to 134 passed an amended Senate bill according him honors. The President is authorized to place him on the retired list of the corps of the civil engineers with the rank of rear-admiral, to date from April 6, 1909, and so as to tender the thanks of Congress for "his Arctic explorations resulting in reaching the North Pole."

ARE GIVEN FULL POWER

Hydro Electro Commission is to be Given Full Charge of Poles, Conduits and Wires

STUDHOLME EXONERATED

Toronto, March 4.—Sir James Whitney made an instructive statement with respect to the privileges of members at the sitting of the Ontario Legislative yesterday afternoon. An important measure defining the future authority of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission was introduced by W. K. McNaught. Considerable progress was made with a number of local municipal bills.

Mr. McNaught moved the first reading of a bill to amend the Hydro-Electric Power Commission Act. It is designed to give the Hydro-Electric Power Commission absolute jurisdiction over the location of poles, conduits and wires of any municipal corporation using power furnished by the Hydro-Electric Commission.

It states that in all cases where, in the opinion of the commission, it is desirable that conduits should be laid or maintained or lines of poles erected upon any street on which other conduits or poles have previously been placed, the commission may order that, notwithstanding any law to the contrary, the poles, conduits or wires of any municipal corporation using the commission's power may be placed at such positions as the commission may order, notwithstanding the proximity of existing conduits or poles.

The commission is also given power to order that the wires of municipal companies may be attached to any existing poles where such poles are capable of carrying the additions, without injury to the property of existing companies. The municipal corporation must pay the existing company such remuneration as the commission may order. If the poles are unable to carry more wires, and it is in the public interest that two lines of poles should not be erected, the commission may order that stronger poles be erected, to be used by both systems. The municipal company must erect the new poles and remove the old ones, making all necessary connections, at its own expense, and shall indemnify the existing company for any expense in connection with the change. The substituted poles become the property of the private corporation, subject to the right of the municipal system to string and maintain wires thereon. The commission's power is extended to cover renewing of poles and conduits.

Allan Studholme was exonerated by the Government regarding the complaint of one of the members that the member from East Hamilton had been quoted in the newspapers as having disrespectfully spoken of the members of the Legislature. He had been reported as saying that the local Parliamentarians were a "lot of loafers"—a term which Sir James Whitney said, in opening the question, the House was not familiar with. "But," added Sir James, "I have examined into the question and I am convinced that the honorable gentleman did not say any such thing."

Mr. Studholme had told a story in which the remark was accredited to someone else. If he had made the remark, it would not reflect upon anyone in particular. Had he, however, made reference to any individual member or members, it would be an offence within the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House.

"Every member will agree with me," continued the Premier, that if he had made use of this language, in a personal way, it would not go unnoticed.

Mr. Studholme thanked the Premier for taking the common-sense view of the matter. He didn't say it and could bring 1,000 persons to swear that it was untrue.

Strike In Big Hotel.

Toronto, March 4.—One of the largest hotel strikes in recent years in Toronto started yesterday, when over fifty waiters of the King Edward Hotel walked out without giving any notice. Only six regular waiters remained, and last night the service was somewhat impaired. Manager Bailey declared last night that the walkout would not affect the hotel business, as they already had offers of available men from the various hotels in the city. The men take a different view of the situation, and declare that the management must have lost close on to $1,000 last night.

Naughty Town.

Montreal, March 4.—The crowded condition of the Montreal jail has made it necessary to transfer a number of the prisoners to Quebec. This morning Governor Valle visited Chief Campeau and requested that he be given fifteen men for the purpose of conveying 50 prisoners to Quebec today. Fifteen men from the different stations in the city have been selected and will convey the party to the capital by special train to-day.

Want More Troops.

Springhill, N.S., March 4.—Following the riot of Thursday quietness prevails at the mines. Men are standing around in groups discussing the situation, but no disturbance took place yesterday. Of twelve strikers who returned to work at the first of the week, five stayed at home, three of them because they would not face the hostile demonstration to which they were subjected Thursday, and two because of injuries sustained at the hands of the crowd. The two were Stephen Kenney, whose back was hurt by a stone, and Howan Koon, struck by a piece of ice in the back of the head.

The charge against Manager Sharpe, who was arrested by the town police, was "inciting to riot."

There will be a requisition for further troops to be sent to Springhill. The force now on the scene numbers 35 men. The strike has now continued for eighteen months.

FOR SKIN DISEASES

A Treatment That Costs Nothing Unless It Provides Satisfactory Relief

We have a grayish-white ointment with a pleasant odour that is clean to use; which we believe is the best known remedy for the relief of skin diseases. It is especially efficacious for overcoming eczema in all its various forms, ring worm, acne, pimples, blotches, insect bites, tetter, certain forms of ulcers, sores and wounds. It is strongly antiseptic, cleansing, soothing and healing. It stops all itching and burning caused by skin eruptions.

We are so positive this ointment is unequalled that we offer it with the distinct understanding that if after having given it a reasonable trial, you are not satisfied with the results, you have only to tell us and we will, without quibbling, return every cent paid us for it. We exact no promises or obligations whatever.

We want you to try Rexall Eczema Ointment. The first application gives a refreshing sense of relief, and because of its germ destroying power, it eradicates the germ or parasite which causes eczema and many other eruptions. It quickly allays the inflammation, gives protection to the inflamed surfaces, and helps restore healthy tissue. It is particularly active in relieving skin ailments peculiar to children. You certainly cannot lose anything by trying it. We would not dare make this offer except we are positive Rexall Eczema Ointment will satisfactorily benefit you. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Remember, you can only obtain it at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

Graft In Chicago Suburbs.

Chicago, March 4.—After investigating charges of graft and corruption at East Chicago and Indiana Harbor, Ind., suburbs, a grand jury returned thirty indictments yesterday and adjourned.

Among those named are Mayor A. G. Schlieker, Chief of Police Albert Lewis and City Clerk Walter Spencer, of East Chicago, and Julius Friedman, alleged head of a conspiracy to collect tribute for the protection of vice.

Farmers' Bank Case.

Toronto, March 4.—The charge of accepting Farmers' Bank notes as a pledge contrary to the provisions of the Bank Act will be heard in the Police Court March 7. This date was set yesterday morning when Hon. J. R. Stratton, J. J. Warren and W. S. Morden were called to answer the charge. Upon the charge of conspiracy to secure an improper precedence over other creditors of the bank for the Trust & Guarantee Co., Matthew Wilson, K.C., and W. S. Morden was also laid over till that date.

The statement made yesterday that the conspiracy case already sent for trial will be heard in the May Assizes instead of in the autumn was yesterday confirmed. It is now doubtful if it will be possible to hold Travers here until that time. He is still held by Judge Winchester's order in the Munro case, but this will be disposed of before the Assizes sit, and it is now a question whether Travers will be sent back to Kingston [illegible].

Coronation Party.

Ottawa, March 4.—The Canadian Parliamentary party which will go to the coronation will probably consist of thirteen members of the Commons and five Senators. Of the thirteen members of the Commons, eight will be Liberals and five Conservatives. The invitation from the British Government asked that eighteen members of Parliament be sent.

FUNDY WAS OMITTED

The United States Refused to Arbitrate it at the Hague—The Surplus Will be a Record

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Ottawa, March 4.—C. Jamieson (Digby) introduced a discussion in the Commons yesterday on the failure of The Hague tribunal's decision to apply to the Bay of Fundy, and asked by whose advice this important body of water had been omitted from the award.

Sir Alan Aylesworth said that the matter was closed when Lord Aberdeen in 1845 addressed a letter to the American ambassador at the Court of St. James, which, while maintaining the legal right of Great Britain to exclude foreign fishermen, agreed to relax these rights in so far as the fishermen of the United States are concerned.

Mr. Jamieson quoted from the correspondence referred to by Sir Alan, to prove that such was not its meaning. He said the fishermen of the bay were anxious to know what their rights are. If the bay was British territorial waters, Canada has the right to control the fisheries from shore to shore. In time of trouble, the fishermen could be relied upon to fight for the Empire, and it was the duty of the Government to see that they got their rights. He believed that in this instance the Government had failed in its duty.

Sir Alan Aylesworth said that the burden of Mr. Jamieson's complaint was that something had been given away in regard to Canada's rights in the Bay of Fundy. He would point, however, that, whatever were Canada's rights before the negotiations, they were just the same to-day. The reference to The Hague tribunal did not affect the Bay of Fundy one way or the other, and there had been no arbitration in reference to it. The position of Canada might possibly be stronger to-day on account of the success attained in connection with the other points dealt with by the award, but otherwise the position was not changed.

When Hon. Mr. Fielding makes his budget speech next month, according to present indications, the surplus of revenue over all expenditure on consolidated fund account should be in the neighborhood of thirty millions, or ten millions ahead of last year.

For the eleven months of the fiscal year the revenue has totalled $104,302,705, which is an increase of $14,618,945 over the corresponding eleven months of 1909-10, and nearly three millions more than for the whole of the preceding fiscal year.

For the whole of the present year it is estimated that the total revenue will run close to $117,000,000.

Expenditure will probably be about $86,000,000.

Hotelmen to Raise Rates.

Toronto, March 4.—"The Government is simply declaring itself in as a partner in the profits of business. It takes a share of the profits, but assumes no responsibility for the losses," was the way one boniface expressed himself at a meeting of the Toronto Hotelkeepers' Association held yesterday afternoon at the King Edward Hotel, with President Wm. Hassard in the chair. Both the large and small hotels of the city were represented, and the members present were unanimous in their opinion that the proposed amendments to the Liquor License Act are unjust and constitute a serious blow at the interests of the trade in Toronto and throughout Ontario.

After a full discussion, resolution of protest against the Government's proposals was passed without a dissenting voice. Steps will be taken to put the views of the hotelmen before the Government. Should these fail to receive consideration, a general increase in hotel rates will probably follow, as a committee was appointed at yesterday's meeting to draft a new schedule of hotel rates which would make up the losses imposed upon the trade by the five per cent. tax on bar receipts, should the measure pass the Legislature. The hotel men declare that they will have to raise their rates if the bill is adopted.

St. Petersburg, March 4.—In an imperial rescript published yesterday Emperor Nicholas announces his intention to complete his grandfather's work for the emancipation of the serfs by transforming the peasants into not merely free, but economically strong landowners. This may be achieved, the emperor says, by affording the peasants facilities to leave their communes and by improvement in agricultural science.

AT WORK IN 3 WEEKS

$4 Worth of Father Morrisey's "No. 7" Cured Her of Inflammatory Rheumatism.

Mrs. Agnes Edgar, of Grand Falls, N.B., had a terrible time with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Anyone who has had this most painful disease will understand her suffering—and her joy when she found Father Morrisey's "No. 7" had cured her. She says:

"I took Father Morrisey's Prescription for Inflammatory Rheumatism. I had suffered everything with it, but in three weeks after starting Father Morrisey's Prescription I was able to do my work, and after taking four dollars worth of medicine I was well. I highly recommend it any sufferer with Rheumatism."

Rheumatism comes from bad kidneys. The poisonous Uric Acid which they should remove stays in the blood, accumulates in joints and muscles, and causes agony. Father Morrisey's "No. 7" puts the kidneys right, removes the Uric Acid from the blood and the whole system, and cures the Rheumatism. 50c. a box at your dealer's, or from Father Morrisey Medicine Co. A Big Fruit Crop.

St. Catharines, March 4.—The fruit crop of the Niagara district promises to be much larger than last year, judging by samples of buds produced at the growers' convention, which was brought to a close here yesterday afternoon. The frosts of winter have not done the least harm, and unless some unexpected or unforseen danger arises, the fruit will be plentiful next summer.

CARRIED GLADNESS TO THIS HOME

Mrs. Annie Vanvorst's Heart Disease Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills

She found quick relief in the old reliable Kidney remedy, and advises all her friends to use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

St. Benedict, Sask., March 3.—(Special.)—Gladness has replaced the anxiety that reigned in the household of Mrs. Annie Vanvorst of this place. For some time past Mrs. Vanvort had suffered from Kidney Trouble and palpitation of the heart, and fears were entertained of those terribly sudden fatalities that so frequently accompany affections of the heart. But relief from both ailments was quickly found in the old reliable remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills. In an interview Mrs. Vanvorst says:

"I had palpitation of the heart and my Kidneys were out of order. I took one box of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and found great relief. For a Kidney pill Dodd's Kidney Pills cannot be beat. You may publish what I say as it may be the means of benefitting others who suffer with Kidney Trouble or Heart Disease."

Pure blood is the basis of all health, and you can't have pure blood unless your Kidneys are in good working order. Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to put the Kidneys in perfect working order.

Face Torn In Two.

Thornhill, March 4.—With his face split from the forehead to the lower jaw as the result of the bursting of a circular saw, Warren Page, the eldest son of Lewis Page, of the second concession of Vaughan Township is hovering between life and death with physicians in attendance holding out no hope of recovery.

A remarkable feature of the injury is that the gash goes the full length of his face, and yet both of his eyes escaped injury.

NORMAL SCHOOL TURNED TABLES ON THE COLLEGIATE

The Normal school team turned the tables on the Collegiate Institute seven at Brock street rink yesterday, defeating the Central Park high brows by 6 goals to 2, the same score by which the Institute team defeated the Normalites last week. It was a complete reversal of form, the Pedagogues showing fine speed and the ability to keep it up throughout and checked the Collegians off their feet. It was a fast and well played game and was witnessed by a noisy and enthusiastic crowd, with the ladies in the majority, both in numbers and noise. The nearest the Collegiate could get was to tie the score once, after the Normalites had scored the first goal. After that the winners scored five in a row before the Central Park aggregation found the nets again. It was 2 to 1 at half time in favour of the Normalites, Park, Stewart and Rickerby did the best offensive work for the winners, while O'Brien proved a great defence man and Cavanah played a fine game in goal. Ray and Matthews on the forward line were the best for the losers. Gibson did some great checking on the defence. Frank Hefferman was a satisfactory referee. The teams were:

Pick Of Senior O.H.A. Players Here Wednesday

Trainer Billy Breen of the Peterborough Hockey Club is back from Toronto, after having completed arrangements for an All-Star Senior O. H. A. team to play the Peterborough Intermediates here on Wednesday night of next week. There has been a feeling in many places outside of Toronto that there were at least half a dozen Intermediate teams who could defeat any of the so-called senior organizations. The game on Wednesday night and that in Midland on Friday night should just about settle the question as the team which will play here will be stronger than any one of the Toronto seniors, as it will be picked from four or five of the teams, and will be in reality as well as in the name an All Star cast. Varsity and Parkdale teams will contribute players as will either the Argos or Eatons, which ever loses tonight's final game. The game should undoubtedly be the big hockey event of the season. The Petes are confident of making things interesting for the visitors, although the reputation of the players of the All Stars is sufficient to make any team stop and ponder. The locals never had to extend themselves to beat he T. A. A. C. team here the other night, but it will be a different matter to dispose of the All Stars. The Petes will practice at Brock Street Rink a 7 o'clock on Monday night and a full attendance is expected as this will be the last practice before the game.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

Some time ago the Wm. Hamilton Co. hockey team challenged the C. G. E. machine shop Mercantile League hockey team and to date we have received no reply, and as the rink closes the end of next week, we should like to hear their gentle voices.

I suppose it is ancient history about the W. H. Co's team lifting the Stanley cup, and for the benefit of the ignorant, we may say we have it.

The cup, which is pure gold, stands about 14 inches high and rests on an ebony base and we will try and have it on exhibition in some store in Peterborough by Monday, and we are willing to put it up for competition with the C.G.E. team.

As an after thought, we would suggest if we should not hear from the C.G.E. team, that several pairs of heavy woollen socks are good for their complaint.—Com.

The senior fourth and junior fourth teams of the South Central school met in an exciting game of hockey this morning, the seniors winning out after a hard battle by 5 goals to 4 At half time it was 3 to 0 in favour of the juniors, but the ultimate winners came strong on end and just won out. Harold Knapman refereed.

In an interesting game at Brock Street Rink last night No. 3 Company of the 57th Regiment succeeded in defeating the Regimental Bugle Band by 14 goals to 11. The Musicians had the better of the first half and at the breathing spell were in front 7 to 4 but the Privates came back at them in the second period, scoring 9 goals to 4. LeBar and Mills were the stars for the Bugle Band and Spilsbury and Succee were the pick of No. 3 Company.

A team from Keene visited Peterborough last night and were defeated by a local picked team by 3 goals to 2. in a close and exciting match.

Mr. C. G. Graham yesterday received word from the manager of the Orillia Hockey Club that the Orillia team are running an excursion by special train to Kingston for Monday night's final game for the junior O. H.A. championship. The train will leave Orillia at 9 o'clock and will reach Peterborough at 12 on the Grand Trunk. No doubt a number of Peterborough fans will go down to see the final as the fare from Peterborough will be only $2.35 return, a remarkably low rate. Most Peterborough fans are pulling for Orillia to win. They have nothing against Kingston, but the feeling is that the Frontenacs won last year and it is time for a change. Anyway the plucky showing of the Orillians has aroused the admiration of local followers of the game.

SPECIAL TO THE HOCKEY MATCH

A special train of vestibuled coaches will leave Orillia for Kingston on Monday, March 6th, Orillia-Kingston hockey match. The train will pass Peterboro about noon. Fare, for round trip, $2.35. Enquire at Grand Trunk city ticket office. Come along with the boys 1d-53-4168

THINKS DAUGHTER IS A CAPTIVE IN NEW YORK CITY

NEW YORK, MARCH 2.—Mrs. Francis Arnold, mother of Miss Dorothy Arnold, whose disappearance last December has become the most baffling mystery of the present decade, stated to-day that she is convinced that her daughter is held captive in some house in this city.

"Not since December 12 have I seen my daughter, despite the continued insinuations that my trip to Florence disclosed her hiding place," declared Mrs. Arnold. "I think she was kidnapped on that date and is held prisoner in one of the many dens that are allowed to flourish in this city. If the police would only do their duty I feel certain that she could be rescued, but even if their numbers ran into thousands, they are known to be lax in enforcing the law.

"My daughter went down town on December 12, purchased a box of candy and a book. She then walked up Fifth avenue, and I feel certain was grabbed, thrown into a taxicab and literally hauled away to some place where she is now a captive and unable to communicate with the outside world.

"Not so very long ago another young woman, from just such a family as my own, was picked up from the sidewalk in one of the cross streets near Fifth avenue and whisked away. She was held a prisoner in a supposed respectable neighbourhood and only rescued because a business associate of her father happened to hear of her appeal. The matter was hushed up for the family wished no notoriety.

"This shows what can happen in this well-guarded city and bears out my contention that my daughter can be found if the police are forced to do their duty.

"When Dorothy disappeared I formed four reasons that might have been her reasons. These were suicide discontent, elopement, kidnapping. I began investigations and by diligent work eliminated all others but the last theory.

"I intend to devote my life to finding Dorothy, and since the newspapers have failed and the police have accomplished nothing, I will start out alone. It is a disgrace that such a thing as this could happen."

WELL KNOWN SMITH RESIDENT IS DEAD

One of the most respected residents of Smith, in the person of Mr. John Garbutt, passed away at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Manson Comstock, Sherbrooke street, this (Saturday) afternoon, at the age of 77 years.

Mr. Garbutt as the eldest son of the late Isaac Garbutt, and was one of the most enterprising, straightforward citizens the township ever had. While taking a great interest in municipal and public affairs and always voting when able to do so, he voted for what he considered to be for the best interests of the community or country, irrespective of the views of others, and in this way while in his early life he had voted Conservative on many occasions, he had voted Liberal latterly in both Dominion and Provincial elections. Mr. Garbut mas one of the best citizens the county ever had and took an interest in everything that tended to the advancement of the community generally. In religion Mr. Garbutt was a firm believer in th Baptist doctrine, and when able to attend service at the Murray street Baptist Church was one of its regular attendants.

For some years he had been troubled with rheumatism and has not been able to move about with the freedom of his earlier days. Wherever assistance was required to help along the church or to assist the needy, Mr. Garbutt could always be depended upon to render that assistance.

Mr. Garbutt was married to Miss Davidson, daughter of the late James Davidson of Smith, and sister of Mr. William Davidson and Mr. James Davidson, of Peterborough. His wife predeceased him about 20 years ago.

He leaves behind him two daughters and two sons to mourn his loss. The daughters are Mrs. E. F. Mason and Mrs. M. Comstock, of Peterborough. And the sons are Mr. J. H. Garbutt of Smith, and Mr. R. A. Garbutt, on the homestead. He also is survived by three brothers, Messrs. Isaac of Dummer, Harry of Smith, and William of Douro.

Each winter for a number of years Mr. Garbutt has been in the habit of coming to Peterborough, and residing with his daughters, while taking a course of treatment, and came to the city about a month ago, but shortly after his arrival took a pain in his head, which never left him, and which finally affected his heart, causing his death.

The funeral will be held on Monday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock from the residence of Mr. M. Comstock, 219 Sherbrooke Street, to the Little Lake cemetery. The service will take place at the house at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Herman Halstead and little daughter, of Fort William, Ont., spent a few days with friends in the city this week.

A NEW YORK BROKER IS ROBBED OF ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS

Amazing Bold Robbery in Broad Daylight—Old Substitution Trick Was Worked Upon Him.

A COMPLETE SUCCESS

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, MARCH 6. — To be robbed of a hundred thousand dollars in negotiable securities in broad daylight on Thursday and not to know it till to-day, such was the experience of Geo. Bancroft, aged 66, head of the firm of brokers of that name. Thursday afternoon, as was his habit every Thursday, Bancroft took his papers to deposit them in the Produce Exchange vaults. A big tall man ran against him, knocking his down and knocking the bundle of papers from his hand. Another smaller man came running up and very solicitously helped him up and shoved a bundle under the old gentleman's arm which, after thanking him for his assistance, he carefully deposited in the vaults.

This morning when Bancroft's junior partner went to the vaults to get the securities he found only an envelope containing three old newspapers. It is evident Bancroft was robbed Thursday by a clever substitution trick. The securities included industrial and mining stocks, all negotiable and there is no clue.

NINETY BURNED TO DEATH

Examiner Special:

ST. PETERSBURG, MARCH 6.—Ninety persons, including many children, were burned to death, and many were maimed, when fire destroyed a moving picture palace in a provincial town on Sunday. There were terrible scenes. The building had no fire escapes.

A BAD FIRE IN CLEVELAND

Examiner Special.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, MARCH 6.—Two fatally injured, and fifteen seriously, was the result of a spectacular fire in a Greek lodging house, here.

Believe The Bill Will Pass

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, MARCH 6.—Those in the Capital, who are not in favour of the Canadian Reciprocity Bill are inclined this morning to admit that the indications point to the passage of the measure at the special session called for April 4th. COMMITS SUICIDE

Special to The Examiner:

McLEANSBORO', ILL., MARCH 6. Despondent because her lover, whom she was to have married to-day, accidentally shot himself Friday, Bertha Lee, aged 24, suicided by shooting herself through the head early this morning.

LIVELY RUNAWAY

BRIDGENORTH, MARCH 6.—A lively runaway occured on Chemong Lake last week, when a team, owned by Mr. Hurlehey of Downeyville, took fright at an iceboat and ran away. The sleigh was considerably damaged, but none of the occupants were hurt.

Mr. T. Udy and the Telford Bros. have their fine new ice boat nearly completed. They intend to have it in operation about the middle of this week. The sail is 21 feet high. The boat itself is 16 feet long and 12 feet broad, and will carry eight or ten passengers. The owners have confidence in the quality of their new boat and estimate that it will be capable of attaining a very high speed.

The telephone men are running a line out of Chemicks cheese factory. It is now nearing completion.

Mr. and Mrs. Telford of Bridgenorth, were in Peterborough on Saturday last.

PETERBORO' CHEESE BOARD IS STRONG FOR RECIPROCITY

Thirty-fourth Annual Meeting of the Organization Was Held on Saturday Afternoon—Officers Elected and Resolution Passed.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board was held in the Council chamber, Peterborough, Saturday afternoon. There was a large attendance of members, and considerable important business was transacted.

Among the resolutions adopted was one of condolence with the family of the late G. W. Fitzgerald, for many years a prominent buyer on the board. The old officers were re-elected as follows:

President—W. C. Switzer.
First Vice-President—W. A. Anderson.
Second Vice-President — Wm. Hannah.
Secretary-Treasurer—E. Hawthorne.
Auditors—Messrs. Miller and Ballen.

After a full deliberation and discussion the following resolution respecting the trade agreement in reference to reciprocity, with one exception — did not vote—unanimously adopted, by the score of members present, each representing between thirty and forty patrons:

"Moved by E. Hawthorne, seconded by W. A. Anderson, that whereas a certain section of the citizens of our country, notably bankers, manufacturers, etc., are deeply concerned as to the welfare of the farmer in the present negotiations respecting reciprocity with the U. S.

And whereas, we always cherish and admire the good will and advice of others in the upbuilding of the farming community, believing it is the basic industry in Canada. Yet we hesitate to accept the advice of those whom we firmly believe are exploiting the farmers for their own purpose, and we stubbornly refuse to submit being made "the cats-paw" for others.

Therefore, we the members of the Peterborough Cheese Board, at this, our 34th annual meeting, affirm, and unanimously with one exception, support the enactment of the present reciprocity agreement being negotiated by the Government with the United States. And further, we would respectfully ask those who are so anxious about our prosperity, to seek their own welfare, as the farmers of Canada are well able to hold their own against all comers, when not handicapped by trade regulations.

Resolved, that the secretary forward to our local representatives Messrs. Stratton and Sexsmith, a copy of this resolution, asking them to support the present reciprocity agreement."

UNPRECEDENTED RUSH AT SETTLEMENT SALE

The ten days' sale commenced at the store of H. LeBrun and Company on Saturday opened with an unprecedented rush, the store being crowded all day, several times to such an extent that it was found necessary to close the doors and refuse admission to any more customers. Few rushes of the kind have been seen in Peterborough. From the opening hour in the morning until late at night the spacious store was jammed with customers and the augmented staff had its hands full looking after everyone. A record day's sales were made, the bargains, as was prophesied, being early snapped up.

Orillia Excursion Went Through At Noon To-day

Peterborough was invaded for a few minutes this morning by one hundred and seventy-five enthusiastic supporters of the Orillia Hockey Club who went through to-day on a special en route for Kingston, where the Younkers play the final game for the junior championship to-night. Whatever may be the outcome, the rooters from the shores of Lake Couchiching did not seem to be worrying any.

"They have got to get a two goal lead to beat us," said one be-ribboned fan to the Examiner, "and we don't think they can do it."

Mr. Thomas Cunningham, formerly of Peterborough, was among the Orillia contingent and he seemed to have caught the fever as bad as the rest.

"Kingston may beat us, but I don't think they will. The boys seem very confident," was the way he expressed himself.

The Orillia team went down to Kingston on Saturday to rest up before the game.

SENSATIONAL INCIDENT

A rather sensational incident occurred at the Charlotte Street G. T. R. crossing when a junk dealer, with a one-horse outfit, heavily loaded with iron got stuck on the crossing about 11.30 this morning, and directly in front of the Orillia Hockey special. Mr. Chas. Noyes, gate-man, ran out with a red flag, and got the train stopped just in time to prevent a catastrophe. The junk man pulled off half his load of iron and managed to make the horse pull the remainder of the load off the track. He then proceeded to carry the rest o fthe junk out of the way, during which time the Hockey Special and a Jackson Park and C. G. E. trolley car were held up. The junk dealer got rather excited, but managed to of the junk out of the way, during finally traffic was again in motion.

COMBINED MEETING

A combined meeting of the special committees of the Sunday school superintendents and W.C.T.U. will be held on Tuesday, at 10.30 a.m., in Mr. Johnson's store. The Sunday school members are Rev. Mr. Riddiford, Park street Baptist; Mr. R. J. Devey, St. John's; Mr. Medill, St. Paul's, with Mr. Johnson chairman. This meeting is in connection with the special crusade against cigarette smoking, of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

CONGREGATION LISTLESS DREAMERS

Examiner Special:

NEW YORK, N.Y., MARCH 6.—That his congregation is a lot of listless unenterprising dreamers, was the candid opinion given yesterday by Rev. Charles F. Aked, pastor of Rockefeller's Fifth Avenue Baptist church. Rev. Aked came here from Liverpool four years ago, getting $10,000 salary and says he may go into the Congregational ministry at San Francisco.

SKEPTICS BEING CONVERTED DAILY.

For years it has required from 6 to 10 months. The Syl-la-bic System as being daily demonstrated at the Moon College, 282-286 Yonge street, Toronto, qualifies first-class stenographers after only 25 to 30 or 35 days' study. This means one-fifth of the time, or even less, and but one-half the fee, and enables the student to earn salary from 4 to 8 months earlier than under any other system. A very cordial invitation is extended to any interested to thoroughly investigate the Syl-la-bic Shorthand at the Moon College, 282-286 Yonge street.

WEDDING BELLS

LAING—RODDY.

A quiet wedding was solemnised at the Methodist parsonage on Tuesday afternoon of last week, when Miss Minnie P. Roddy formerly of Kingston and Mr. Reuben S. C. Laing, of Peterborough, were united in the bonds of holy matrimony, the Rev. Mr. Henderson, of Charlotte street Methodist church officiating. The happy couple left on the 4.36 train for Detroit and points south, and on their return will reside in Peterborough. A host of friends join in wishing them health and prosperity.

Appreciation

1910 was a banner year with us, but 1911 carried even greater promise, because we have thousands of patients in the city and vicinity who are wearing glasses prescribed by us, many of whom could not be fitted elsewhere, and we know that they will not lose an opportunity of speaking a good word for us.

We take this occasion to acknowledge our indebtedness to our friends and patrons, our appreciation of their good will and faith in us, which have helped to make our success so great. We would not dispute the fact that we believe that we have deserved well of you. That if you have had confidence in us and have testified upon us your patronage is because we have done something to warrant it. We have done the best we could, and we purpose to keep right on doing so.

We are deeply grateful to our friends and customers for their loyalty. We ask for and hope to merit a continuance of the same.

A NEW YORK BROKER IS ROBBED OF ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS

Amazing Bold Robbery in Broad Daylight—Old Substitution Trick Was Worked Upon Him.

A COMPLETE SUCCESS

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, MARCH 6. — To be robbed of a hundred thousand dollars in negotiable securities in broad daylight on Thursday and not to know it till to-day, such was the experience of Geo. Bancroft, aged 66, head of the firm of brokers of that name. Thursday afternoon, as was his habit every Thursday, Bancroft took his papers to deposit them in the Produce Exchange vaults. A big tall man ran against him, knocking his down and knocking the bundle of papers from his hand. Another smaller man came running up and very solicitously helped him up and showed a bundle under the old gentleman's arm which, after thanking him for his assistance, he carefully deposited in the vaults.

This morning when Bancroft's junior partner went to the vaults to get the securities he found only an envelope containing three old newspapers. It is evident Bancroft was robbed Thursday by a clever substitution trick. The securities included industrial and mining stocks, all negotiable and there is no clue.

MONDAY, MARCH 6, 1911

A PARTY FOOTBALL.

A meeting to "protest" against the trade agreement, will be held in Massey Hall, Toronto, next Thursday night. Since opposition to the agreement has been made a party question by the Conservatives, and since Toronto is slightly tinged with Toryism, we may expect the nature of the protest. Under similar circumstances, if a Liberal government had proposed the enactment of the Ten Commandments, we should find a Toronto party gathering eager to condemn them. The special interests are making a dead set against reciprocity, and a mint of money is being spent in engineering stage-managing and advertising the adverse agitation. The trade agreement involves immense national interests and should be judged on its merits or demerits, not supported or adopted because it is made a party measure. The interests of the whole country are involved, and we should have reasoning and deliberate discussion and not party howling.

INTERFERENCE.

It is asserted that a resolution is to be introduced into the Ontario Legislature condemning the trade agreement, and it is stated also that the Conservative members will vote solidly for it. This is sheer impertinence. The British North American Act defines the rights as to legislation of the provinces. Trade and commerce are exclusively relegated to the Federal Parliament, and the provinces have nothing to do with it. We elect some 230 members to Parliament to do the special business assigned them. The trade agreement is one of the special lines of business parliament has an exclusive right to deal with. Yet, we have the Conservative Government of the Province of Ontario dragooning its supporters into an impertinent interference in a matter that, as legislators, they have no right to meddle with. No member of the Legislature has any more right to have an official voice in pronouncing for or against the trade agreement than the ordinary private citizen. He has no representative right; he has only the right of any other private citizen so far as a question of trade and commerce is concerned.

SOME SUGGESTIVE FIGURES.

(Winnipeg Free Press.)

A good many persons seem to be under the impression that, since 1891, when the United States government rejected the proposition by Canada for the free interchange of natural products between the two countries, there has been something akin to trade non-intercourse between Canada and the United States, as a consequence of which our national consolidation has proceeded apace and our political and commercial relations, with Great Britain have correspondingly improved. They are now excited because they fear that if we resume trading with the Yankees on a large scale, we shall lose something of our national fibre and become more indifferent to our obligations as a British Dominion.

People holding these views may feel better if they will carefully study the attached table and draw for themselves the inferences it suggests. The table shows the trade between Canada and great Britain and between Canada and the United States in three years—1891, the year of the abortive reciprocity proceedings; 1901, just a decade later, and the last financial year, 1910. The figures are from the official Dominion record:

Exports to—

	United States	Great Britain
1891	$ 40,184,505	$ 49,240,556
1901	59,908,906	105,228,964
1910	119,614,727	149,650,466

Each year our trade with the United States has been larger than with Great Britain; and it is has grown much more rapidly. Yet, despite this, the last twenty years has seen the complete disappearance of any feeling in Canada favourable to political union with the United States—a feeling which certainly existed in considerable volume two decades ago.

Last year our trade with the United States was very large, but it was not marked by any pro-American developments. If a trade interchange of $350,000,000 a year leaves us unaffected, how much business must we do before the process of contamination begins?

CHANCE TO MAKE GOOD.

(Ottawa Citizen)

Even Mr. Sifton is not prepared to support an increase in the British preference or, as he puts it, to support a move for the benefit of Britain at the expense of our manufacturers. Yet, Mr. Sifton is not above waving the flag vigorously. We have grown up "under the strong arm of the British empire"; we have reached the point when we can help the mother country "with ships and men"; we are now by American influences to be turned from our destiny as "the rising hope of the British empire," and much more in a similar strain, but we balk at the practical. We are determined to remain the rising hope—if it doesn't cost anything more, and we are willing to continue to grow up under the strong arm provided the strong hand is not held out at the same time.

Up to the present time the advocates for reciprocity have been able to advance arguments to show that Canada's trade and Canada's commercial standing will be vastly increased by the adoption of the proposed measure, while its opponents have had the satisfaction of producing figures and prospects which seem convincing on the other side and which point to certain decay and destruction of our industries and agricultural interests. In addition, our position in the empire is placed in danger.

The preference appears to furnish a test of sincerity or, at least, conviction. If opposition is based on the fear that the reciprocity agreement will, by diverting our trade to the United States, undermine our attachment to the empire the way is open to put such theory to the proof. Otherwise, the position simply is that we do not care to extend our trade at all.

Speeches for and against the proposed agreement may sound well, but what the people want is an exhibition of faith. The advocates of reciprocity show courage and conviction in undertaking the agreement. Its opponents should, to be convincing, propose a practical move and be as ready to assume the consequences.

INCONSISTENCY.

(Montreal Witness)

The very presses from which the most screeching hysteria about the dangers of annexation is emitted are made in the United States, instead of being brought from dear old England. The bankers, who have had as much as anybody to say against better trade relations, have done their utmost to spread their own trade in the United States, and are very willing to act as agents for United States financiers here. At this very moment, in fact, while the Canadian banks have nearly $84,000,000 loaned on call in New York, at only about 2 1-2 per cent., they have only about $40,000,000 on loan in Canada, for which they are charging 5½ per cent. From the point of view of their own profit the banks may be justified, but where does this doctrine that intercourse means absorption come in? The Bank of Montreal is the biggest stoner in this respect, for, while it lends nearly $50,000,000 on call in New York, it will not lend a stiver on call in Canada; and the Bank of Commerce, whose president Sir Edmund Walker, has recently proclaimed in ringing tones that reciprocity means annexation, is lending over $11,000,000 on call in New York, as compared with $7,000,000 in Canada! Then the Canadian railways—whose chiefs are shouting loudly the slogan that reciprocity means annexation—have they not penetrated into the United States with their lines as far as they possibly could, thus promoting this baneful and unpatriotic intercourse to the utmost, and all for profit? Worse than that—if there can be worse—have they not given running rights to the American railways, for base profit, over their lines, and thus put Canada strategetically even now in the hands of the enemy. But what fustian is all this "annexation" talk Mr Sifton announced in his speech, for which the capitalists and the deluded flock which follows them are so sincerely thankful, that the discussion of reciprocity has already made annexation a foregone conclusion, in fact, that it is already here. If Mr. Sifton is right that annexation is here, because of the talk about it, it is plain who has brought it here. It is certainly here as far as it is going to be while Canadians are of the same unanimous mind against it as they are now. Mr. German, however, another stray sheep from the Liberal fold, has no patience with the annexation bogey, though the reciprocity bogey is very real to him and frightens him very much.

ANNEXATION POLITELY AND POETICALLY DECLINED

(By Dr. J. K. Foran.)

(Written in 1905 by Dr. J. K. Foran, Asst. Law Clerk, House of Commons, on the subject of Annexation. They were written in reply to a letter from a United States Senator fro mBoston, who had said: "You will have a still grander country when, with the consent of the majority of your people, your Canadian Dominion will be part of our glorious Republic.")

No; the spirit of our people is not for Annexation,
Despite the score of babbles that would have you think it so;
Like you, we feel the pulsings that proclaim our land a nation.
But we wish to have your friendship as we proper and we grow.
There is not, in all our country, a single true Canadian
Who would barter that proud title for a gleam that could not last;
From the summit of our Rockies to the land of the Acadian
We are loyal to our Future, as we glory in our Past.

We respect your great Republic, your splendid institutions,
The starry flag that hovers where your eagle soars on high—
But remember that no union could cement our constitutions,
Our customs, ways and manners, 'neath the same politic sky.
Yours alone would be the profit; ours the real annihilation:
We would forfeit all we cherish, our identity and laws;
We would see our peaceful Beaver, like a national oblation,
At the mercy of your emblem, once within its giant claws.

For a hundred years, and over, you've been building up your greatness,
Your people are accustomed to the atmosphere you've made;
In another air we're working, despite apparent lateness,
To construct our special system, with a faith that cannot fade.
We have undeveloped treasures, far beyond the dreams of Croesus,
Hidden in our mountain passes, by our every lake and rill;
There's no power of legislation that can crush us, or can raise us,
Save the one in Gothic structure on old Bytown's Barrack Hill*.

The fathers of our fathers thro' those forests carved the by-ways,
That in days of colonizing led to where our homes now stand;
And our fathers turned the prairies, while we built the countless highways,
And the iron roads of progress that now intersect the land,
While the missionary's life-blood has stained our soil with glory,
The sweat of our departed ones bedewed our hard-won sod,
And we feel a glow of triumph in the brightness of our story,
For it tells that we're a Nation held distinct, as such, by God.

We will join you in the progress up the Future's rugged sloping,
And extend to you the friendship that we ask from you in turn;
Side by side will move both nations, ever working, ever hoping,
'Till the lamps of Time's grey twilight in the firmament shall burn.
We are children of one parent, of the same great Mother-Nation;
You have gone from her protection and have pitched your tent afar;
We have kept, through all mutations, the old and close relation,
And within her constellation we are now the brightest star.

We could never change our customs—not in countless generations
To adapt our ways and systems to the laws that you obey;
So we'll just remain in future two free countries, two relations,
Animated by one spirit, as each treads its prosperous way.
To your flag you're truly loyal, hence for you our admiration—
You are faithful to traditions that have sanctified your sod;
While our homes and Constitution, in our loyal estimation,
Both demand our highest homage, after that we owe to God.

*The Parliament Hill and Buildings at Ottawa are referred to as the Gothic structure on the Barrack Hill; Bytown was the original name of the Capital.

AN IMAGINATIVE EFFORT.

(Montreal Herald)

There is a fine fervor of rhetoric about the petition which is being presented to Montreal citizens for signature in opposition to the reciprocity proposals, a fervor which would be slightly more appropriate in a stump speech than in a document supposed to convey the opinions of sober-minded Canadians.

Sentiment, rather than serious thought, is likely to be the actuating motive of most of the signatures, and possibly sentiment may not baulk at a number of statements which cold reason would be slow to endorse in such a public manner. Signatories to this petition are required to place on record their belief that the reciprocity agreement will so affect the national credit that "British and foreign capital would not trust itself in a country so unstable in its fiscal policy," in face of a rise in the price of several Canadian securities and a general maintenance of the rest in the British market since the proposals were announced. They are required to deplore the placing of Canadian farmers in open competition with the cheap farm labour of such foreign countries as Japan, Argentine, Russia, Denmark, Norway, Hungary, Spain, Switzerland and others, when they are perfectly well aware that for the great majority of his produce the farmer already gets a price fixed by the export market in just this identical competition, and that the compact gives him access to a gigantic new protected market in which he is almost the only outside competitor. They are required to shiver at the idea of the powerful people of the United States beginning "to look with covetous eyes upon our prairies, our minerals, our forests, and our fisheries"; with the implication that the aforesaid powerful people had never noticed these things before, and that once they have noticed them with their covetous eyes not all the power of the British Empire can save us from despoliation and ruin.

The signatories are required to affirm that "all classes in Canada would have to pay tribute to the trusts and combinations which rule the prices of food and other commodities in the United States," although they have just noted with sorrow that various other British possessions and foreign states will be able to ship their produce nto Canada if they can market it there below the price charged by the dealers in Canada—a condition which effectually prevents the maintenance of any artificial price for the necessities of life in Canada. They are required to affirm that this policy will "weaken the ties that bind our provinces together," when as a matter of fact the burdens imposed on the Maritime Provinces and other sections of the country by our exclusive east-and-west trading system, burdens which this agreement is the first attempt to lighten, have been the most dangerous factors against the growth of a satisfactory national spirit during the whole life of Confederation.

All this and much more they must declare if they are to sign the document of Mr. Hemming. Will they stop to inquire if these things are true?

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool Wheat Futures Close Lower, Chicago Higher—Live Stock —Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, March 4.—Wheat closed strong today at the highest price of the week. The main reason was the defeat of all chance for immediate enactment of reciprocity. Last trades showed a net gain of 1⅛c to 1⅝c. Every other leading staple on the board finished also at an advance—corn ⅛c to ⅜c to ⅝c, oats ⅛c to ⅛c, and provisions 2½c to 20c. A better tone in flour over Sunday, covering by shorts and decided activity on the part of bull leaders contributed toward forcing wheat to a higher level. Small lots of primary receipts had a part in bringing about the general scamper by shorts. Mills from the northwest led in the buying, and there was unmistakable giving out of bear pressure. None of these conditions, however, had full swing at the start. During the earlier portion of the session, in fact, a weak feeling prevailed, chiefly because of a decline at Liverpool. Various theories were put forward to explain the depression in England, but many dealers here seemed inclined to believe that manipulators on this side were not a little responsible. Buying force gained with the spread of this idea and kept the bears on the run, especially in the last half-hour. Extreme low and high figures for May were 89⅛c and 91⅛c, with the latter the ruling ones in the end, which was at a rise of 1-3c to ⅝c, compared with twenty-four hours before.

The Liverpool wheat market closed today ⅝d to ¾d lower than yesterday; corn ¼d to ½d lower. Antwerp closed ⅝c lower on wheat; Berlin, ⅛c lower.

The Fruit Crop.

Toronto, March 6.—Reports from the fruit belt on the south shore of the lake indicate that the mild weather during the last week or ten days has had a quickening influence on the fruit trees. In the cherry and peach orchards the buds are already showing, and though hard as yet, are well formed. The best authorities in the district say that the trees never looked better, and all the face signs point to an early spring. A slight fall of snow occurred yesterday, but not enough to affect the ground. The frost is gradually coming out.

Died In West Indies.

Montreal, March 6.—News was received yesterday of the death of Chas. Boyd, of the firm of Manderloh & Co., importers, shipping and commission merchants of this city, who had gone to Nassau, N.P., Bahama Islands, to escape the rigors of the Canadian winter. BREAKS A RECORD.

French Aviator Steals J. A. D. McCurdy's Laurels.

Nice, France, March 6.—Lieutenant Bague accomplished a sensational and daring feat yesterday by flying over the Mediterranean from Antibes to the little Island of Gorgona, off the Italian coast. He covered a distance of more than 200 kilometres (124.4 miles), establishing a new record for overseas flight. This he did without the assistance of tugs, torpedo boats or any other craft to guide him or uphold to his confidence by their presence.

Lieut. Bague started at 7.30 o'clock yesterday morning in a Bercit monoplane with the intention of landing on Corsica and proceeding thence by way of Sardinia and Sicily to Tunis, to visit the colonel of the fourth Algerian rifles, from which regiment he resigned to devote his time to aviation.

In the presence of a few spectators the aviator left the ground, rising at once to a considerable height. He shaped his course southward and soon vanished. Aided by a strong wind his progress was rapid, and a despatch was finally received here that he had arrived at Gorgona. This island lies between Corsica and Leghorn. It is a small wooded rock about two miles long belonging to Italy. Bague landed there at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, the descent being made awkwardly and with great danger to the aviator, on account of the trees and rocks. The monoplane struck heavily and was badly damaged, but Bague was not hurt.

It had been his intention to land at Ajaccio, on the west coast of Corsica, but losing his way the aviator shaped his course too far north. As it was, he covered a greater distance over the water than if he had carried out his original plan.

Lieut. Bague's overseas flight breaks the previous record, held by J. A. D. McCurdy, who, on Jan. 30 last flew from Key West to within ten miles of the Cuban shore, a distance of ninety-one miles. Glenn H. Curtis last August made a flight over Lake Erie of 64 miles, while other aviators have done 50 or more on several occasions.

Will Pursue Peaceful Policy.

Paris, March 6.—The new Cabinet met last night and drew up the declaration which will be delivered in the Chamber of Deputies to-day. This declaration says that in the interests of social peace, the railroad employes of the state who were dismissed at the time of the recent strike will be taken back into service, with the exception of those who were guilty of gross insubordination and destruction of property. The railroads not under state supervision will be requested to act similarly with regard to their employes.

The declaration outlines the Government's policy in respect to the laws, the laicisation of the schools, social reform and foreign affairs. It affirms the Government determination to pursue a policy of pacification, based upon the one hand on a system of ententes and alliances, and on the other on a strong army.

Will Fight Typhoid.

Ottawa, March 6.—Hon. Clifford Sifton, chairman of the Commission on Conservation, has offered the City of Ottawa the services of the chief medical adviser of the commission, Dr. Hodgetts, to make an exhaustive enquiry into the source of Ottawa's typhoid outbreak.

To Mayor Hopewell Mr. Sifton stated yesterday that the commission's business included assisting in just such a case as this. Dr. Hodgetts, he said, would be given any assistance he required, and he would be allowed all the time necessary to make a full enquiry.

The mayor and the medical health officer both approve of the suggestion, and so the Board of Health has been called for a special session to-night to consider acceptance of the offer.

Killed by K. & P. Train.

Kingston, March 6.—Saturday afternoon's train coming in over the Kingston & Pembroke Railway, struck and instantly killed Miss Emma Walker, aged 45, employed as a domestic at the home of Arch. Strachan, customs collector. The engineer and fireman saw her on the track, but not in time to save her. It is not known whether she deliberately stepped on the track to commit suicide or not. On the bank close to where the body was found, was her umbrella, bundle of clothing and Bible.

BLOOD BAD IN THE WINTER

Indoor Life, Too Little Exercise, Breathing Impure Air, Eating Artificial Foods.

Is it any wonder that the system becomes poisoned with impure waste matter in the winter time, when you think of the artificial life we lead?

With doors and windows tight shut we breathe the same air over and over again until it is incapable of purifying the blood.

In vain effort to cast the poisons out of the system the liver and kidneys are worked over time until they too are played out. Then comes the pains in the back, the headaches, the attacks of constipation and indigestion.

The quickest and most certain way to overcome this condition is by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They act definitely and directly on the liver and kidneys, awaken them to renew energy in filtering poison from the bowels and remove the cause of indigestion, backache and other body pains.

You are not experimenting when you use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are unique in their combined action on the liver and kidneys and for this reason stand without a rival as a means of purifying the blood and cleansing the filtering and digestive systems.

Aim at Canadian Trade.

Paris, March 6.—M. Pichon, Foreign Minister in the late Cabinet of M. Briand, responding to a toast at a luncheon given on Saturday in his honor by the British and American correspondents, referred to the community of good-will between Great Britain, France and the United States. "During my long and difficult years as Foreign Minister," he said, "I have labored constantly to solidify the friendship between France, the United States and Great Britain. I am not entitled to any great merit in doing this, because how could I have been blind enough to act otherwise? There exists between England, the United States and France so marked an identity of aspirations and solidarity of interests that it would be chimerical to seek to separate these grand peoples who aim ever at common ends—liberty, social progress, democracy, and the maintenance of peace throughout the world."

M. Pichon, in concluding, affirmed that his successor would continue to strengthen the co-operative friendship of these three nations.

Bread Merger In Sight?

Toronto, March 6.—Rumors were rife on Saturday of a five-million-dollar bread merger to buy up the bakeries in Toronto, Hamilton, London and Ottawa, and a meeting of Toronto bakers at the Fleischman Co.'s offices was supposed to be in connection with the proposed merger. The current report was that Mark Bredin was a prominent factor in the attempt to consolidate the bakeries of the chief Ontario cities.

Mr. Bredin was interviewed regarding the rumors. He laughed heartily at the idea of heading a five-million-dollar bread trust. He said that so far as he was personally concerned he had been spoken to regarding the formation of a bread syndicate by Percy Gillespie. The meeting of Toronto bakers had nothing to do with Mr. Gillespie's project. The Toronto men simply met to arrange for compliance with the bread law, and decided to begin on Monday morning.

Confessed to Murder.

St. Leonard De Nicolet, Que., March 6.—Hormidas Trepanier, a farmer, 45 years of age, of St. Leonard de Nicolet, was arrested at his home yesterday by Chief McCaskell of the provincial police for the murder of Maurice Plouffe, whose body was found on the road between Three Rivers and St. Leonard de Nicolet on Thursday night.

Last night Chief McCaskell stated that Trepanier had confessed he had killed Plouffe by stabbing him in the neck and smashing his skull in with an axe. The murder was committed in Trepanier's stable and the body afterwards taken out and left on the main road, where it was found Thursday night by Joseph Lord, a general storekeeper, of St. Leonard de Nicolet, who was returning from a business trip to Three Rivers.

THE STRENGTH OF A CHAIN

Is that of its Weakest Link." Father Morrisey's Lung Tonic, or Forget-Me-Not.

The chain of the physical system is only as strong as its weakest link. When that link breaks, the chain breaks, and serious illness followed by death often results. The weak link with many people is the throat and lungs. In fact, statistics show that over twenty-five per cent of all deaths can be directly traced to diseases of these most important respiratory organs. Weakness here is very dangerous.

During his long and successful practice, Father Morrisey, the learned priest-physician, was often called upon to treat bronchial and pulmonary affections. He soon found that it was not enough to make temporary repairs on the "link" but that it had to be forged anew, in order permanently to strengthen the chain.

After much study, he succeeded in devising a prescription that would soothe this month, by not only giving prompt relief but also by rebuilding and strengthening the delicate cells and membranes of the throat and lungs.

This prescription, Father Morrisey's Lung Tonic, or No. 10, has cured thousands. It is absolutely free from any dangerous drug, being compounded from Nature's own roots, herbs and balsams.

No. 10 stops the cough, relieves the soreness and strengthens and fortifies the system against future attacks. Even in the early stages of consumption it has proved helpful, but the wise plan is to take it in time, and avoid serious illness.

In our climate it is well to have a reliable and tested remedy like No. 10 always on hand. Take it at the first appearance of a cold, and keep the chain of life strong and capable of resistance.

PEOPLE'S PULPIT.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

A SINNER

One Hundred Years Old, Yet Only a Child, Electrocuted.

Might Have Lived a Thousand Years.

Brooklyn, March 5.—Pastor Russell preached this afternoon in Brooklyn's largest Auditorium and in the evening held a Question Meeting. Both services were crowded and at both eager and deep interest was manifest. The text of the afternoon service was, "Thenceforth there shall be no more [death of] an infant of days, nor of an old man who hath not filled his days. For the dying one shall be but the child at an hundred years old—a sinner at a hundred years old, he shall be accursed"—cut off from life (Isaiah lxv, 20). The speaker said:

Our text is a part of the Divine prophecy of the blessings which will come to Israel and to the whole world during Messiah's glorious reign of a thousand years—beginning with the close of this Gospel Era. Succeeding verses tell that in that glorious Epoch landlordism will be a thing of the past. "They shall build houses and inhabit them; they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them; they shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat." Additionally we read, "They shall not labor in vain nor bring forth for trouble." Further we read that then the "Wolf and the lamb shall feed together and the lion shall eat fodder like the bullock."

No end of confusion has been created by the intent of well-meaning people to apply these prophecies as the reward of the Church in heaven. Nothing in the Scriptures warrants us in thinking that there will be spiritual, heavenly sheep and oxen, wolves and lions, vines and houses, planting and building. Those who reject the clear Bible teaching respecting a Messianic reign of righteousness cannot understand the Bible at all. Not a single passage of the Old Testament tells of heavenly hopes or promises. Only a few of them teach heavenly things at all, and then indirectly.

As, for instance, in the types of the Old Testament the garments of the High Priest, glorious and beautiful, symbolize, we believe, the heavenly grandeur, honors and glories of Messiah during the period of His reign. Similarly God's promise to Abraham declares that His Seed, His posterity, shall be as the stars of heaven and as the sands of the seashore. Nothing in this statement would necessarily teach a heavenly state or condition. Only by the aid of the New Testament and the Holy Scriptures' illumination can we see that two Seeds of Abraham are distinctly referred to, the stars indirectly implying the Spiritual Seed, while the sands of the seashore refer to Abraham's Natural Seed. As it is written, "I have constituted Thee a father of many nations"—like unto God.

So the Spiritual Seed of Abraham is now being developed. With its completion this Age will end, and the Natural Seed of Abraham will return to special favor and become the leading nation of the world under the guidance and direction of the spiritual and invisible, yet All-Powerful, Kingdom of Messiah.

The blessing through natural Israel will gradually extend to every nation, in that the door will be opened by which all nations may come into and become a part of Abraham's Seed, and thus into harmony with Messiah's Kingdom. Whosoever refuses this great privilege and blessing of Messiah's Kingdom will be destroyed from amongst the people in the Second Death.

Centenarians of the present time are few, and they by no means are like children. Usually they are wrinkled and haggard. We are to remember, however, the Bible record that several of the earlier members of Adam's race lived nine hundred years or rather, they were more than nine hundred years in coming fully under the sentence against sinners—"But one man's disobedience sin entered into the world, and death as a result of sin; and thus death passed upon all men, because all are sinners" (Romans v, 12).

Gradually, and especially since the flood, when a great change took place in our cosmogony, human longevity has decreased, while mental, moral and physical ailments have increased. Several of Adam's children did not have their first born child until after they were a century old. In confirmation of this, and correspondingly in contradition of the Evolution theory, we find that the Ancients were stronger than we, mentally as well as physically; for they intermarried brothers with sisters and cousins without injury, whereas today the mental weakness of the race is such that one out of every one hundred and fifty adults is in an insane asylum, and the marriage of brothers and sisters is prohibited, and even the marriage of second cousins is disapproved and held responsible for increasing weak-mindedness.

We see, then, that our text, describing Messiah's Kingdom, merely explains that Restitution blessings will recover mankind from the effects of the fall, so that it shall then be as it was in Adam's day—that full human rightness, maturity, will be reached in a century and that a man dying then would be dying in childhood as compared with the remainder of the race. The further guarantee is that none will die even at a hundred years of age, except willful sinners who, refusing to submit themselves to the regulations of Messiah's Kingdom, will then be cut off from life as unworthy of any further favor at the hands of the great Redeemer—Messiah—all of whose dealings will represent Divine Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power.

The Scriptures tell us that under Messiah's Kingdom the days of a man shall be as the days of a tree. And it is believed that some must live to be at least a thousand years old. This is God's provision for every man—every member of the human family—after He shall have accomplished the work of this Gospel Age, the selection of the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, typified by the priests and Levites, "The Church of the Firstborn, whose names are written in heaven."

Messiah's Kingdom is to dominate the earth for a thousand years, with a view to blessing Adam and all of his posterity—with a view to uplifting them from sin and degradation and death. The uplifting influences will begin at once, following the great time of trouble with which the Kingdom will be inaugurated. The judgments of the Lord will be broad in the earth and the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness. None shall longer need say to his neighbor or his brother, "Know thou the Lord: for all shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest of them," for "the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth" (Jer. xxxi, 34; Isaiah xi, 9).

Whoever, then, by obedience to the laws of the Kindom will avail himself of the blessed privileges or Restitution (Acts iii, 19-21), will not only be helped upward out of mental, moral and physical imperfection, step by step toward perfection, but, so long as he progresses, he may live—clear down to the end of that blessed thousand years. If we had never seen trees; if our own experiences had been with vegetation such as perishes within a year, we might have difficulty in believing some one who would tell us of having seen trees centuries old. Such a statement would seem as unreasonable to us as to tell us that humanity could live for a thousand years or forever.

Have we not indeed seen children old and wrinkled looking, yet only in their teens? And have we not seen others cheerful, fresh and comparatively young-looking at sixty and seventy?

At the present time God "winks" at much of the wrong-doing that there is in the world. He does not interfere with it. But of course every transgression carries with it naturally more or less of a depraving influence on the transgressor's mind and body. The conscience is the most tender and the most important element of our human nature. Whoever violates it, whoever injures it, much or little, will proportionately be disadvantaged in the future and will have all the more difficulty in rising up gradually out of his degradation and weaknesses, even with all the helps that will then be available. Thus will be fulfilled the Scriptural declaration, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that also shall he reap."

With all mankind redeemed there will be nothing whatever of the past chargeable against any on the books of Divine Justice. The great "High Priest," by his better sacrifices, will have made full satisfaction to the demands of Justice, but the weaknesses, mental, moral and physical, resulting from more or less willful and deliberate sin, must still be reckoned on, and thus every idle word and every idle thought, every idle and vicious action of the present time, by making its mark upon the characters of men, is providing for corresponding difficulty on their part in that glorious day of their opportunity.

The suggestion of our text is that the great Messiah will not temporize, for the entire period of His reign, appreciation of opportunities when fully brought in contact with them and clearly understanding the terms of Divine grace. But one hundred years is quite a considerable period of probation and surely every reasonable mind will concede that so long a delay in meeting out the full penalty of sin, Second Death, manifests the extreme limit of reasonable mercy.

The Church, whose trial is in progress during this Gospel Age, receives individually a much shorter period of probation than our text declares will be granted to mankind in the future. God's saintly people are expected to develop character and to approve themselves to God as "overcomers" within a very brief space of life. And not only so, but they are required to "walk by faith and not by sight." They merely have God's Word as respects His Justice and Love and gracious plans, while, in the next Age, the world will have the actuality instead of the promise—the world will walk by sight. "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed and all flesh shall see it together" (Isaiah vl, 5).

The world during Messiah's reign will be privileged to walk in a highway of holiness, from which all the stumbling stones will have been gathered out. But the overcomers of the Church class are required to walk in the narrow way, steep, narrow, rugged, and beset with snares of the Adversary. "For we are not ignorant of his snares" (II. Corinthians ii, 11).

We are not to forget, however, that these differences between the Church and the world are fully offset by the differences of reward. The overcomers of the Church are to be rewarded with glory, honor, immortality, "the divine nature," and be joint-heirs in the Kingdom as members of the great Messiah. The world is to have no such change of nature from human to spirit, but is to have the earthly Eden. Truly God's ways are equal. True and righteous are Thy ways, Lord God Almighty" (Revelation xv, 3, 4.)

The Church's test takes place in the present life. And in each member thereof the matter of worthiness or unworthiness of eternal life on the spirit plane for all time is determined at death. Not so with humanity in general. As we have just seen, some may live to only a hundred years and then be cut off in the Second Death, because found unworthy of further opportunity. Others, by availing themselves of the privileges and rendering obedience to the laws of the Kingdom, may live to the very close of the thousand years, and be found unworthy of eternal life. Still others may so fully appreciate Divine Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power and may become so obedient thereto that God will be pleased to grant them eternal life. Their days, their lives, will be far more than the days of a tree.

The world of mankind, at the conclusion of Messiah's reign of righteousness, will have attained again the perfection originally enjoyed by father Adam. Like him they will be in Eden, which then will be world-wide. Those perfect human beings, will be required to stand a test—to demonstrate, to prove their absolute loyalty to God and his righteous laws, as Adam was tried, tested, proven in Eden. As Adam was promised eternal life if his test proved him loyal to his Maker, so his restored race will have before them the offer of eternal life if they shall manifest their obedience satisfactorily.

We are not informed of the particulars of the test that will then be applied to mankind. We merely have the figurative declaration that Satan, sin and everything which Satan represents will be loosed for a little season at the close of Messiah's reign (Revelation xx, 7-10). The world, full of perfected humanity, "as the sand of the seashore," will all be subjected to the test. But how many, or what proportion of the whole, will prove loyal, and what proportion disloyal, we are not informed.

All that we know on the subject, and all that is necessary for us to know, is that the trial will be thorough and just and that all found faithful will have eternal life, and all found unfaithful will be counted as followers of Satan and, with him, will be destroyed in the Second Death. The test which God will apply will be so searching, so thorough, that although his creatures will still be free moral agents, he is able to guarantee that thenceforth "there shall be no more sighing, no more crying, no more dying, because all the former things of sin and death shall have passed away."

Not a word is said about the hundred-year old sinner—child—being sent to eternal torment, just as there is not a word said in the Bible to the effect that Adam or his children were condemned to eternal torments. The sentence upon Adam, which his race shares by heredity, was a death sentence. This just but awful penalty has wrought havoc with our race—sickness, sorrow, pain, dying, death.

God's mercy has provided the redemption of Adam and his race through His Son, who died, the Just for the unjust. The death of Jesus is the price which will eventually secure the release of Adam and all of his posterity from the death sentence and give to them resurrection privileges provided through Messiah's Kingdom reign.

But every one who has been enlightened, and brought to a clear knowledge of God and to the opportunities provided for his salvation from sin and death, is more responsible for the manner in which he accepts or refuses "the gift of God, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." As the wilful, intelligent sinner in the Church now is sentenced to the Second Death (Hebrews vi, 6; x, 28-31), so, our text tells us, it will be the masses of mankind during the Messianic reign. If they wilfully reject reconciliation to God, they will die the Second Death. God has provided a redemption and recovery from the first death, but assures us that the Second Death will be an eternal one.

Instant death from electric shock will be the method of executing the penalty of wilful sinners during the next Age, and not hanging nor decapitation. Thus it was that in olden times two of Aaron's sons, having violated their relationship with God and having disobeyed Him, were smitten to death. Fire from the Lord smote them—an electric flash. We may be sure that torture will not be heedlessly inflicted on such. They will lose everything, but will not be tortured. Stripes or punishments, chastisements, are sometimes used of the Lord, but always in a reformatory manner—"He chasteneth every son whom He receiveth." He chastens none others—none for whom chastising would accomplish no blessing. Such will be smitten down in the Second Death.

"The Goddess Of Liberty"

AT "THE GRAND" TO-NIGHT.

Mort. H. Singer's "The Goddess of Liberty," brightest, merriest and most melodious musical comedy, will be the offering at the Grand to-night. "The Goddess of Liberty," not only answers all the requirements of a legitimate comedy, coupled with tuneful and pleasing melody, but it has set a pace in a direction that is at least a full season ahead of anything yet offered. It has been built along lines heretofore untouched by musical comedy authors and for this reason has reached a spot that has yearned for something out of the ordinary. Its story is different its action is different and its comedy is different from all others. The production is scenically and electrically complete in every detail, while the costuming is gorgeousness.

Among the many catchy musical numbers will be found: "Don't Choose a Gibson Girl," "I wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" (by request); "Lonely," "What's the Use of Dreaming," "Hail Diana," "If All Moons Were Honeymoons," "Something," "The Haunted Pool," "Let's Pretend," "The Life Guards," "Here's to the Lost Girl" and "Tummy Tum Tum."

BOY SCOUTS

Held a Successful Meeting on Saturday Night

The Peterborough Boy Scouts held their regular meeting Saturday night. There were about forty boys present, besides Scout Master Hodges, Asst-Scout Master J. Golden Rosser (from 3rd troop, Toronto) and Mr. F. Tait. Mr. Hodges was forced to leave the meeting early, so the scouts were left under Mr. Tait and Mr. Rosser.

Mr. Tait explained to the boys how lumber was brought from the mountain sides to the mill in British Columbia.

Mr. Rosser told the boys about a hundred mile tour that he had made. It was very interesting, but especially so, as it showed that scouts are warmly welcomed everywhere.

An English Chemist Has Discovered How to Grow Hair

In England the ladies have entirely abandoned wearing rats, which is due entirely to this new discovery.

It has been proven that Henna leaves contain the ingredients that will positively grow hair. That they contain this long-looked-for article is proven every day.

The Americans are now placing on the market a preparation containing the extract from Henna leaves, which is having a phenomenal sale.

This preparation is called SALVIA, and is being sold with a guarantee to cure Dandruff and to grow hair in abundance. Being daintily perfumed, SALVIA makes a most pleasant hair dressing. The Tully Drug store is the first to import this preparation into Peterborough, and a large, generous bottle can be purchased for 50c.

It is felt by those who are promoting the organization that it is time steps were taken to prevent the spread of the great white plague here, and it is hoped that there will be a large attendance on Friday night. Further particulars in connection with the meeting will be announced to-morrow.

MEN MUFFLE CONSCIENCE

As They Do the Engine in Their Motor Boat, Says Rev. Jas. Rollins.

"There is many a man who muffles his conscience just as securely as he muffles the engine that drives his motor-boat or his automobile in order that he may not hear its noise," remarked Rev. Jas. Rollins, in the course of an excellent sermon at St. Andrew's church last night.

Faversham In "The Faun"

Famous Actor is Coming to the Grand on March 29 in a New Play

The title of William Faversham's new play, "The Faun," by Edward Knoblauch, which he will present at the Grand Opera House Wednesday, March 29th, is as novel as the story or theme of the drama. In this play Mr. Faversham will impersonate a faun, the son of Pan—something new to the stag. The faun is a deity of the woods and herds, the god of the shepherd. He is supposed to be half human, with pointed ears, short horns and goats feet. The faun in Mr. Knoblauch's comedy is discovered bathing in a fountain in the garden of a London house. He is at first thought to be a tramp, but on examination he is discovered to be a mythological creature of the woods. He proves so out of the ordinary that he is given modern clothes to wear and opportunity of becoming a member of the household and is thus given an opportunity of becoming a member of our work-a-day life. Beginning with this unique dramatic device the dramatist has provided a story of extraordinary interest and charm.

A resident of Peterborough and an applicant for a position on the Police force, and a black lister, appeared in court this morning, charged with non-support of his wife and family. This was accordingly done, so the case will be heard before His Worship Magistrate Dumble in the Police Court next Thursday morning.

Another Pioneer Resident Removed By Hand Of Death

By the death at the family residence, 639 George street, this morning of Mr. Michael Sullivan, Peterborough lost one of her oldest and most highly respected citizens. The late Mr. Sullivan, who was eighty-six years of age, had been a resident of this city since he was a young man, coming to Peterborough when it was nothing but a straggling hamlet, containing but a single brick house. His career has, therefore been contemporaneous with the growth of Peterborough from a small village into one of the largest and most prosperous of the smaller cities of the province.

The late Mr. Sullivan was born in the County of Cork, Ireland, and emigrated to Peterborough sixty-one years ago, having been a continuous resident ever since. He was therefore prominently identified with the early growth of this city. He early associated himself with the lumbering industry and followed up that business until the weight of advancing years demanded that a less strenuous occupation be sought. He then turned his attention to the grocery business and was successful in building up a large trade, which, in later years, has been carried on by his son, Mr. Daniel Sullivan.

The late Michael Sullivan was known for his sterling integrity and his strict honesty in all personal and business matters. His many estimable characteristics won for him the respect and esteem of the very many people with whom he came into contact, and he will be missed by hosts of friends and acquaintances in Peterborough and the surrounding district.

He is survived by eight children, six daughters and two sons. His wife predeceased him eleven years ago. The daughters are Mrs. Halpin, Mrs. Laing, Mrs. Buchanan, and Mrs. J. J. Duffus, all of Peterborough; Mrs. Kennedy of Montana, and Mrs. Bacon of Chicago, and the sons are James Sullivan of Montana and Daniel Sullivan of this city.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock, from the late residence, 639 George street to St. Peter's Cathedral, and thence to St. Peter's cemetery for interment.

HE WAS PARALYZED

Mr. William J. Brennan, Western Hill, St Catharines, Ont., tells what it feels like to be paralyzed. He lost power of speech, face was drawn out of shape, lost flesh, could not sleep. Five doctors failed to help him. Electricity proved ineffective He used Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food until his former good health was restored. Face was restored to shape, power of speech returned and he gained in weight Says he would not return to former condition for all the gold in the country

VESTA VICTORIA'S TWO NEW HITS

Vesta Victoria has two songs in her repertoire that bid fair to become as popular as "Waiting at the Church" and "Poor John." These songs are entitled "Now I Have to Call Him Father," and "Don't Sing the Chorus." In several Canadian cities visited by Miss Victoria and her big company of international players, the little English singer has fairly taken the audience off its feet with enthusiasm, being forced to give eleven encores of the same chorus on one occasion.

THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE JOHN GARBUTT OF SMITH

The funeral of the late John Garbutt, for most of his life a prominent resident of Smith Township, took place from the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Manson Comstock, 219 Sherbrooke street, this (Monday) afternoon; and the large attendance bore witness to the high esteem in which the deceased gentleman was held by the community. The religious services were conducted by Rev. J. R. Webb of the Murray Street Baptist Church, and Rev. Robert Pogue, of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. The pall-bearers were Messrs Robert and William Garbutt, brothers of deceased, J. H. Garbutt and Albert Garbutt, sons; and E. F. Mason and Manson Comstock, sons-in-law. Interment was in Little Lake cemetery.

In the list of relatives left by Mr. Garbutt as given in the notice of his death, the names did not appear of Mrs. Samuel McKibbon, Lakefield, and Mrs. J. H. Mann, Peterborough, sisters of the deceased gentleman.

The death of Mr. Garbutt removes from the ranks of active, useful, and respected citizenship a gentleman who has, in this vicinity, creditably sustained the relations of a good and public-spirited citizen, good neighbour and faithful friend, for nearly three score and ten years. His loss will not only be deplored by a wide circle of relatives and connections, but by the entire community, in whose esteem his worthy life and strong character won him an enviable place.

IN FEAR OF RUSSIA

Chinese People Are Alarmed Over the Indications of Aggression

Occupation Is Predicted

A BOXER UPRISING

Perkin, March 6.—The fear of Russian aggression is increasing here. Reports published in the Russian papers and reprinted in the Pekin papers greatly exaggerate the dangers from the plague. Many of the higher class Chinese fear a design to alarm Europe and justify military occupation. Despatches from Harbin state that Russian military circles are advocating occupation.

The Vladistock newspapers print warnings of the danger of a Boxer uprising, but the Chinese Government emphatically denies the possibility of such a thing, declaring that the entire country is under control.

The measures taken to combat the plague beyond Harbin are not yet satisfactory to Russia, and the frontier is still closed to Chinese. Outbreaks in Manchuria are anticipated later, owing to the distress occasioned by the long stoppage of transportation and the consequent interference with trade. Agitators, probably affiliated with the Boxers, are reported to be rousing the superstitious natives, but the Government, with the aid of the police, is limiting their sphere of activity. Proclamations are also being issued, explaining the nature of the plague and the measures which must be observed to prevent its spread.

The melting snow in many places is exposing to view bodies which were hastily secreted during the early period of the epidemic, so that they might not be burned. These are regularly being collected into piles and cremated.

Will Use Hydro-Elective.

London, Ont., March 6.—The preliminary decision between Hydro-electric, city and street railway representatives for the taking of the Niagara power by the London Street Railway, took place on Saturday afternoon.

The whole situation was carefully gone into by the engineers representing the Hydro Commission, and a draft agreement submitted to the company. The matter is now in the hands of the engineers, who will report back to the company and commission.

The proposition that has been submitted to the company, is the "universal" one, that providing it is accepted by the Hydro-Electric Commission, will be the one adopted by it as a basis for all negotiations with the city and suburban railway companies.

London is the first "city" system that the system has been applied to, and should the agreement be found to cover the situation locally, when applied, it will likely be adopted without further question.

Wants New Party.

Vancouver, March 6.—Quite a political stir has arisen in Vancouver over a local agitation to enlarge the limits of the city to take in South Vancouver. The latter is now a city of over 40,000, and of three times the area of Vancouver itself. The climax of the agitation came on Saturday night when 2,000 annexationists, at a mass meeting, called on the five members for Vancouver in the Legislature to resign. Mayor Taylor challenged any or all to contest a seat against him, and especially submitted his invitation to Attorney-General Bowser.

The mayor, whose newspaper has always been Liberal in politics, said that he could get satisfaction out of neither political party, Liberal or Conservative, and proposed that a new provincial party be formed to fight both. No action was taken along this line.

Heir Hanging on Tree.

London, March 6.—What is believed to be the solution of the mystery of the strange disappearance of the Hon. Francis Patrick Clements, brother of Lord Leitrim, and only heir to the earldom, has been found in the Isle of Wight, where in the quiet churchyard of St. Boniface's Church the missing heir is now said to lie buried. Clements left England in May, 1907, in order to earn his daily bread, and at various times since then strange stories concerning him were sent from America, New Zealand and Japan, and it was reported in 1908 that he had died in Kansas City. It is now stated that Lord Leitrim has identified the photograph taken of a man found hanging from a tree in the Isle of Wight and buried in a nameless grave as that of his brother.

Enlarging the Livingstone Channel.

Windsor, March 6.—This week will mark the beginning of work on the Livingstone channel, and Superintendent Locher expects to have night and day shifts working within a few days. It will take ten days to get the mechanical equipment in order, and only one cableway is now in use.

TO MAKE CHANGES

Taft Wants to Alter the Text of the Agreement—Congress Ends its Session Without a Vote on Reciprocity

AN EXTRA SESSION

Washington, March 6.—The 61st Congress came to an end yesterday afternoon, and the 62nd Congress will be called in special session on April 4, to act on measures which the 61st Congress failed to pass. All the big appropriation bills got through, but President Taft's tariff board measure was lost in the House and the proposition to admit New Mexico and Arizona jointly to statehood was lost in the Senate.

The passing of the 61st Congress was attended by scenes of riotous disorder both in the House and in the Senate.

Senator Bailey of Texas, wild with anger because his colleagues would not follow him in opposition to admitting Arizona as a state because of its radical constitution, tendered his resignation, and when Vice-President Sherman refused to accept it sent it by wire to Governor Colquit of Texas. Bailey expects to be promptly re-elected by the Texas Legislature.

At the close of Congress on Saturday practically every member was at last ready to admit that they believe that there will be no delay in passing the agreement in the next House, but that as soon as the lower Chamber can be organized the McCall bill will be reported from the ways and means committee, in its present form and run through the House. This will then place it squarely before the Senate, and it is hoped to avoid further hearings in the finance committee. This stimulates the belief that the McCall bill ratifying the treaty will be back again before the Senate in its present position probably a good deal before the end of March, provided that the new session is called as early as is now expected, and is promptly organized.

Reports were current that the President had concluded to accept a few amendments to the treaty, provided the Canadians could be induced to assent to them.

This report was based upon the fact that Consul-General Foster of Ottawa has been called here for conference and that the Canadian Cabinet member is likely to arrive here very shortly. The latter visit will, however, have no direct bearing upon reciprocity, but it is thought possible that the President, when the current conferences are over, may indicate a willingness to accept a few changes in the agreement, provided they are not objectionable to the Canadians. These, it is believed, will be in the direction of freer trade.

If the President should conclude to place such items as meat products, flour and a few others on the free list of the treaty, he would undoubtedly meet the demands of the insurgents, and would take away much of the basis of their argument against the agreement. In that event the document might be considerably strengthened before the country. No such course has been definitely determined upon, but the indications are that even if it is not, the insurgents and Democrats in the Senate will have the votes to amend the agreement in the direction indicated. It would probably be good politics to anticipate them.

There is no positive prediction here in any quarter as to the length of time that will be required to pass the reciprocity treaty in the Senate. There is a pretty general concession that it can be adopted in some form, whether amended or unamended, if brought to a vote. Estimates as to the time required vary from two weeks upwards.

It is already evident that the paper people intend to offer a very bitter opposition to the ratification of the document. They are preparing for strenuous resistance and the latest proposition seems to be that of retaining at least some portion of the existing tariff, Canada, of course, to do the same. Presumably this would not vitiate the agreement, particularly as the Canadians have not shown much anxiety to accept it, and the terms of the document postpone the subject to the indefinite future in any case. This, however, will not be done without a very sharp struggle.

The call for an extra session was as follows:

"Whereas, by this special message, dated Jan. 26, 1911, there was transmitted to the Senate and House of representatives an agreement between the Department of State and the Canadian Government in regard to reciprocal tariff legislation, together with an earnest recommendation that the necessary legislation be promptly adopted;

"And, whereas a bill to carry into effect said agreement has passed the House of Representatives, but had failed to reach a vote in the Senate;

"And, whereas the agreement stipulates not only that the President of the United States will communicate to Congress the conclusions now reached, and recommends the adoption of such legislation as may be necessary on the part of the United States to give effect to the proposed agreement, but also that the Governments of the two countries will use their utmost efforts to bring about such changes by legislation at Washington and at Ottawa.

"Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the power vested in me by the constitution requires the convening of both houses of the Congress of the United States at their respective chambers in the City of Washington on April 4, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon, to the end that they may consider and determine whether the Congress shall, by the necessary legislation, make operative the agreement."

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has a uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

Minneapolis Has Million Dollar Conflagration—Two Lives May be Lost

A HEROIC FIREMAN

Minneapolis, March 6.—One of the most disastrous fires this city has ever known, destroyed yesterday the syndicate block, on Nicollet avenue, between Fifth and Sixth streets. The total loss is estimated at $1,000,000, and it is possible that two lives were lost, although this has not as yet been definitely determined.

Twelve persons were rescued from the upper storeys of the building, while the flames were roaring around them. Some of these sustained slight injuries, but none were seriously hurt.

The origin of the fire is unknown. The alarm was given by some passerby on Nicollet avenue, who saw the flames bursting out of the second storey window. An alarm was quickly given, but before the firemen had arrived, the tenants of the building, who were asleep in the upper rooms, began to appear at the windows, calling frantically for aid.

A strong southwest wind was blowing, and in a very few minutes the west half of the building was a roaring furnace. The entire fire department of Minneapolis was called out, but it was totally inadequate to check the flames. Later a call was sent to St. Paul for help, and this was immediately furnished.

The members of the Franson family, on the third floor, finding all exit by stairway and front windows cut off, made for the fire escape on the alley side of the building. Elmer Franson leaped to the fire escape through a blast of flame to a window; out of which was his only escape. Holding to the hot irons of this ladder, he helped his mother to climb through the window and stepped on the platform beside him. As soon as her hands touched the rails, Mrs. Franson uttered a shriek and would have fallen to the ground, had not Fireman Caldwell leaped to her rescue from a ladder perched against the New England building, which adjoins the Syndicate building. Caldwell made a leap of fully ten feet and took a chance of falling to the pavement forty feet below if he missed the fire escape. Fortunately he struck it right, and reached Mrs. Franson's side not a second too soon.

He assisted her to the ground, while Elmer Franson followed, shouting "there are two women back there in the flames, I saw them fall." The firemen made every effort to break into the building at this place, but the heat was too great and they were repulsed. All the occupants of the upper floors were accounted for. It is believed by the firemen and police that young Franson was mistaken when he said that he saw two people in the building as he left the fire escape.

During the progress of the fire there were several explosions at the west end of the building, the heavy stone sidewalks being lifted high in the air and huge pieces of stone scattered about the street. The explosions were attributed to breaking gas pipes.

Fatal Fight Over Girl.

Montreal, March 5.—In the Court of King's Bench, the grand jury has returned a true bill on the indictment for murder against Rossario Casavant charged with killing Ernest Bigras.

The young men had a quarrel over a girl residing in Seigneurs street, with whom Bigras was keeping company. Bigras worsted Casavant in a fist fight, but a few days later Casavant struck Bigras on the head with a stick, in the end of which there was a nail. The nail entered Bigras' head, and four days later he died in the Hotel Dieu from the effects of blood poisoning.

Dominion-Ottawa Team Bank League Champions

Defeated Montreal Outfit in Final Game Saturday by Five Goals to Nothing---The Result of the Game Was Never in Doubt---Fast, Rough Exhibition.

The Dominion-Ottawa team won the championship of the Bank League on Saturday afternoon by decisively beating the Bank of Montreal team in the final game by 5 goals to 0. The Dominion-Ottawa tea mhave won a clean-cut claim to the championship as they captured both semi-final and final games by margins that left no doubt of their claim to the title. They had as much or more of the play in Saturday's game than the score indicates and all things considered were much the better team showing better combination, working in better on the nets and checking back much more consistently and closely than the losers. The result was that the game was never in doubt, especially as the Montreal team were inclined to adopt unorthodox tactics and as a consequence suffered somewhat severely from penalties. It was a hard fought contest all the way. Although the Dominion-Ottawa team forced the play, their opponents put up a stubborn resistance and the winners had to work their heads off for the scores they made. Their own goal was seldom in danger because the forwards were always back to help out, the defence and the Montrealers even when they got into shooting range were covered up so effectually that Sheffield was only called upon to turn aside one shot in the second half. The score at half time was 3 to 0.

Play was even at the start, with both teams going hard. Sheffield saved a score by coming out and checking the man with the rubber when his defence was beat. Eventually, however, the Dominion-Ottawa team began to force matters and had half a dozen shots in succession, most of them, however, wild. Finally Corkery started the scoring by slipping one past Sawers on a neat shot from the wing. Play had hardly started again when Thompson went through the Montreal defence and carried the rubber right in for a score. The ultimate winners kept plugging away and had a number of opportunities that were spoiled by bad shooting or clever stops on the part of Sawers. Finally Cook, the little ex-Milton O.H.A. junior batted one through on a rebound and the Dominion-Ottawas were three in front. The figure remained unchanged until half time.

The second period saw almost a repetition of the first. The Montreal team tried hard but were rarely dangerous, while on the other hand the Dominion-Ottawa were working down with a combination that carried them in and Sawers had a lot of work to do. Ross scored the first goal of the half on the prettiest rush of the game. Breaking away from his own goal he skated away from the Montreal forwards and swept around the defence, going right in on top of the nets for a score. A pretty piece of combination between Corkery and Cook allowed the latter to score Goal No. 5 from a few feet out.

The game was strenuously contested and not any too clean, Referee Fred Kelly having to execute a number of penalties, Thompson and Cook of the D.-O. team took the count during the battle, but finished out the game.

The three Dominion-Ottawa forwards played good hockey, passing unselfishly and checking back well. Corkery was always dangerous in his rushes down the right boards and Thompson did some neat rushing and stick-handling. Cook was working all through the piece, took his bumps without a murmur and came back for more. Ross was very effective on the defence and although he was watched so closely that his rushes were not in evidence as much as usual, he managed to get away for one gallop that ended in a goal.

Elliott was the best of the Montreal team, but received little support from his other forwards. Perks did some great checking and contributed a lot of useful work, while Sawers saved his team from a worse beating by some brilliant saves. There was a large crowd of fans present and excitement ran high throughout. The team and summary follow:

1 Dominion-Ottawa, Corkery.
2 Dominion-Ottawa, Thompson.
3 Dominion-Ottawa, Cook.
Half time—
4 Dominion-Ottawa, Ross.
5 Dominion-Ottawa, Cook.

It may be a few new dark horses they have to spring, it may be a conspiracy to cripple some of the stars of the Single Men, but whatever it is the Married outfit are as talkative as so many oysters. However, the exponents of Single Blessedness are not worrying any over the outcome. Their team is trained to the minute and confident of making the Married Men look like a plugged nickel with the rim torn off. Mr. Charles Curtis, the phenomenal left wing player of the Review team and member of that famous collection of poultry known as the "Tame Bantams" has been persuaded to assume the duties of referee. He has made one stipulation that no player is to carry a razor or a jack-knife. This has been agreed to at a conference of the players and the rule will be strictly adhered to. It is proposed to make an application to the city council to-night for the use of the Isolation Hospital as a temporary hospital for the injured and extra ambulances will be ordered. Spectators are warned that the streets nearest the ice are liable to be dangerous and the teams will not be responsible for injuries to spectators within fifteen feet of the sides. If some of the Married Men were to fall in the centre of the rink there would be extreme danger of some one on the side getting a skate in the face This warning is final.

EDDIE HOWELL STILL A STAR

Former Peterborough Player's Sensational Work in Chicago Game

Eddie Howell, who cavorted around on the Peterborough Intermediate O. H. A. team the year of the famous Belleville injunction, and who was considered one of the greatest players who ever wore a Peterborough uniform, is still playing hockey and is apparently as fast as ever, according to the following [redacted] a Chicago paper, kindly sent to a member of the Examiner staff by Percy Rubidge of Chicago, the old Peterborough lacrosse star:

Edward ("T") Howell, who won fame in years gone by with the Paris and "Soo" Canadian teams and who later coached the Galt O. H. A. seven the first time it ever decisively beat Berlin, added some more glory to the name of Howell last night at the Ice Palace, when he led the White Sox to a 3 to 2 victory over the I. A. C.

Howell put up one of the most sensational exhibitions ever put up by any player in the speediest game of all. He sailed through the whole I. A. C. team time after time and scored the second goal for his team with as magnificent a piece of play as ever has been seen on any ice.

The contest was one of the hottest yet seen at the Ice palace. The I. A. C' has been cleaning up right along on the local teams and it went into the game to keep its record. The White Sox, however, played the game of their lives, and right from the start, thanks to the wonderful work of Howell, showed the men from the

ALL STARS WILL HAVE A VERY STRONG LINE-UP

The game at Brock Street Rink on Wednesday night, between the Peterborough Intermediates and an All-Star picked team, chosen by Harvey Sproule, one of the O. H. A. board of referees, is the principal topic of conversation with the hockey fans of the city and, with the weatherman evidently favouring the game, there should be a big crowd on hand. Sproule has been taking an All Star team for a tour for several years now, and last year his selection succeeded in trimming the champion Collingwood Intermediate team on their own ice. This year's team will be equally strong and the Petes will have their work cut out for them. With Holmes of the Parkdales, in goal, Murphy, the sensational point player of the Argonauts, at point, and Stockton, the hard-checking defence man of the Parkdales, at cover, the All Stars will have some defence. Hunter and "Lornel" Ridpath of the Parkdales, will likely play the wings and McCreath of T. A. A. C., and Fleming of the Argos, the two centre positions, although the forward line is not definitely arranged. The Toronto Globe to-day says:

Harvey Sproule of this city, is organizing an all-star team to play at Peterborough on Wednesday night. Of course none of the Eatonia or University of Toronto players will go, they being engaged in the city championship game here that night. If Midland wins the intermediate honours the all-stars will also play in that town. Some of the players who will compose the picked team are Holmes, Murphy Stockton and McCreath.

Doctor Told Her She Did Not Have A Pint Of Good Blood In Her Body.

Mrs. Dosithe P. Cormier, Middle Sackville, N.B., says:

"In the spring of 1897 I was all run down, and the doctor told me I had not a pint of good blood in my body. I took different remedies from doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. After having taken a lot of different other kinds of medicine, and they did not seem to benefit me, I was almost in despair and did not know what to do until my husband met a lady and told her about my sickness and she told him to try Burdock Blood Bitters as she had received the greatest benefit from using it. My husband went and bought me a bottle, and after having taken it I felt better, so I kept on using one bottle after another until I had taken six in all and then I was strong and well. I am positive that my being alive to-day is due to the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. One spring since then I was not feeling very well and had a lot of work to do. I thought I would procure a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and after I had taken two I was able to do a lot of hard work all the summer, and I never felt better in my life. In the winter of 1906 I had Pneumonia, and it left me with a severe pain in the left side. Every morning when I would get out of bed I had to sit down for a while it was so painful. After I had used Burdock Blood Bitters the pain disappeared completely. It has also cured me of bleeding piles. I have received so much benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters that you may publish this as it may help others as it has me."

BASKETBALL

The opening games in the City Basketball League furnished two fast and exciting games. The teams appear to be very evenly matched, as the scores will show. The first game was between the Fairies and Giants and after a most strenuous contest the Fairies won the contest by 24 points to the Giants 20.

Fairies—Hall and Elliott, forwards; Cannill, centre; Fleming and F. Turner, defence.

Giants—Loomis and Tait, forwards; Downing, centre; Sisson and McCarrell, defence.

Referee, Murray; Umpire, Davies.

The second game was a very pretty game to watch, both teams playing a fast, combination game; at one stage the Ponies would lead, then the Pirates would tie the score, the score being tied many times. However, when time was called the Ponies had a lead of one point on their rivals. Score, Ponies 20; Pirates, 19.

Ponies—A. Flowers and W. English forwards; Wallis, centre; M. Turner and Shore, defence.

Referee, D. Loomis; Umpire, G. Hall.

The Whirlwinds and Featherweights meet in a City League game at 9.00 p.m. on Wednesday night.

AN IMPRESSIVE SIGHT

Giant Iceberg Seen in the South Atlantic

Probably one of the largest icebergs seen of recent years near the track of ocean-going steamers was viewed from the liner Gravia as she passed the Falkland Islands in the South Atlantic on her way to Liverpool. A graphic description of the monster berg was given by an officer of the ship. "The night was cloudy," he said. "There was a cutting wind and the temperature of the sea was down to 32 degrees when the great iceberg came into view—a huge mass 500 feet high, partly covered with mist, a long shelving shore of ice; with the sea breaking upon it as upon a wide, deep into beach. When the moon appeared the sight was one never to be forgotten. We gazed upon what seemed to be a floating city of ice as large as Liverpool, with its towers, its temples, its tapering monuments, shooting up in fantastic architecture, shimmering in the moonlight like polished silver. It is the lot of few to see such a sight." Everyone on board the Gravia was spellbound by the majestic beauty of the scene. The berg, which was visible for some hours, is supposed to be the detached portion of a permanent Antarctic icefield.

FOUND HIDDEN MONEY

John Eastup, of Runcorn, Cheshire has discovered in various parts of his cottage nearly $5,000, which had been hidden by his wife, who died a week or two ago. Eastup knew that his wife was of very thrifty habits, and after the funeral commenced a search of the house. Secreted in a cupboard he found a basin containing several hundred threepenny-pieces, in another cupboard was a board of half-crowns, and beneath a brick in the cellar floor a teapot filled with 365 sovereigns was discovered.

INEBRIATE ACTS

The Institutions in Scotland are of Great Value in the Care and Treatment of Drunkards

In a report to the Secretary for Scotland the Inspector for Scotland under the Inebriates Act says that during the year ended December 31, 1909, there were in all nine institutions under his inspection, including three licensed retreats, five certified inebriate reformatories, and one State reformatory. The total number of persons dealt with during the year was 339, of whom 121 were retreat patients and 118 reformatory inmates. Compared with the returns of the previous year the institutions numbered one more, a new retreat having during the year received a license, but the persons dealt with are 14 fewer, retreat patients being 1 less and reformatory inmates 33 fewer. These figures, says the report, show that licensed retreats continue to be patronized by those seeking treatment in them to about the same extent as formerly, but that the reformatory treatment of the Police Court drunkard is now being less seldom used.

The report goes on to remark:—"Experience gained in Scotland has shown that these institutions for the care and treatment of inebriates can fulfil useful functions. Retreats have been found to be of value as curative institutions for the treatment of habitual inebriety, and reformatories have been found to be of value as places for the segregation and control of drunken poets, and to some extent as curative institutions. The 'recovery rate' in well-conducted retreats is found to approach 50 per cent., and that of reformatories to be about 7 per cent. The former figure is a satisfactory one, and sufficiently good to enable an inebriate to enter such an institution with a reasonable hope of recovery, but the latter figure is small. It could not well be otherwise, because the conditions required for conviction under the Inebriates Acts are so severe that the most hopeful class of inmate is excluded."

ELECTIONEERING DODGE

How an Agent Got Electors to Talk His Money Out of His Pockets

One of the cleverest bits of electioneering dodgery was devised by an agent who had been forbidden to corrupt the electors. He called a meeting and attended with his pockets full of gold. "I have to inform you, gentlemen," he began, "that there is to be no bribery on our side during this election. (Hear, hear.) For my part I do not intend to give away a penny piece. (Unctuous silence.) But I am afraid there are some rascals in this room, and that presently they will lame on the table and take 500 sovereigns out of my pockets." The next few minutes he spent upon the table.

A ROYAL COLLECTION

Queen Alexandra Has All the Letters of Condolence in Connection with Edward's Death

Queen Alexandra has carefully preserved all the letters of condolence her Majesty received on the death of the King, and these are now numbered among her most treasured possessions. The letters have been divided into categories, those from Royalties and intimate friends, and those from thousands of the late King's subjects not only in England, but in all parts of the Empire, many of them being quite poor people, and from little children. The letters have been carefully bound in plain, dark red calf, with a small crown on the cover. Queen Alexandra especially prizes those letters of sympathy which came from poor people, and though it was obviously impossible for her Majesty to reply to them all during the first few months she wrote to several of these correspondents, thanking them for their kind sympathy.

FRENCH POLICE SYSTEM

The Case of Captain Meynier Said to Have Been Mismanaged

Quite an excitement has been occasioned in France by the deficiencies of the police system. The various reports are somewhat conflicting, but they all tend to show that the case of Captain Meynier was grossly mismanaged. He was wanted for murder, but he seems to have gone about quite calmly for a number of days without capture. Indeed, one paper publishes a picture of him carrying his own photograph in his hand, while a policeman is calmly looking on. It was pointed out that no more than ten inspectors were instructed to look for him, whereas if he had been wanted for murder in London, there would have been about 12,000 policemen on his track. In the end, he was caught only because he had the assurance to go and pay a call on a friend at the Ministry of Marine.

SURPRISED THE GERMAN

Story Showing the Energy of a British Soldier

General Sir Reginald Pole-Carew relates the following story showing the energy of the British soldier. A German attache in the South African War was amazed at the spectacle of the British soldiers after a fight staggering into camp, but rushing instantly after a football which was thrown on the veldt. The German attache said to the General, "Well, you are the most extraordinary people in the whole civilized world. I have been with your men all day. I know what they have done. I know they have had nothing to eat or drink, and I know of no other troops in the world that would not have been lying down asleep. If we could do this we could conquer the world."

HOW TO IDENTIFY HIM

It was on account of his splendid work in South Africa that Lord Selborne, who recently celebrated his fifty-first birthday, earned the title of "Peacemaker." He is the man who has proved his worth in various offices, notably as Under-Secretary for the Colonies and as First Lord of the Admiralty. His motto is "Go through life relying on yourself alone." The most useless being he knew, he recently told the boys of his old school in Temple Grove, Eastbourne, was the man who always attributed his misfortune to somebody else. Talking of his school days, he said that he remembered that in his first term a large and perfectly confidential rat allowed him to pick it up by the tail. Of course, the animal at once turned and fastened on his right thumb. 'And if anyone wants to identify me," says his lordship, "they can do so by the old Temple Grove rat."

POLICIES TOO TRICKY

Bill in the Legislature to Regulate Fire Insurance Documents—Mr. McEwing Criticizes

MUST PAY FOR LIGHTNING

Toronto, March 7.—The sitting for a Monday afternoon at the Legislature was one of good progress, with a number of measures. The most interesting to the general public was probably the first reading of Col. Hugh Clark's bill to reform the Ontario Fire Insurance Companies' Act.

The member for Centre Bruce showed that while some companies' policies were clear and concise and confined to the conditions specified in the general act, there were others so complicated and varied that a high court ought find them difficult to understand. One company put 23 conditions from the Ontario statutes in its policies and 29 variations! The variations were not valid in law unless approved by a judicial tribunal, but they were used to exact unsatisfactory settlements. There had been many victims by such trick policies. They were also used to delay judgments, and payments were held up in some cases until heavy commissions were paid, running up to as high as 20 per cent.

The bill provides that damage by lightning must be treated as a fire loss whether followed by actual fire or not, and that payments must be made within ten days after proof of loss.

To protect the companies against fraud the bill limits the extra insurance in another company without the assent of the first company insured to 75 per cent. of the value.

The clause prohibits companies issuing insurance in excess of their assets without the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council.

J. McEwing, Wellington West (Con.), criticized the bill. He declared that the complaints should be directed against the old line stock companies and not against the mutuals.

G. Pattinson, South Waterloo (Con.), also put in a plea for the insurance companies. All the parties interested should have a hearing before their rights were altered by legislation.

Hon. J. J. Foy complimented the member for Centre Bruce on the ability shown in the preparation of the bill and its presentation. It would be said, be of valuable assistance to the commission of judges who were revising the statutes. The bill was referred to the special committee: Hon. J. J. Foy, Hon. J. B. Lucas, Messrs. Hugh Clark, R. R. Gamey, G. Pattinson, J. H. Fisher, W. H. Hearst, C. M. Bowman, T. R. Mayberry and J. McEwing.

R. R. Gamey moved for a return of copies of the correspondence between Ontario and the Dominion Governments respecting fish hatcheries.

Hon. Dr. Reaume in complying with the motion, said that the Ontario Government was awaiting the announcement by the Dominion Government of the international regulations. When they were announced, the Ontario Government will be in a position to see what action to take. The efforts so far to stock the northern lakes with fish from Lake Erie hatcheries had proved rather discouraging. If however, the Dominion Government did not take up the question more generously than they had done, the Ontario Government would have to deal with it. As to brook trout, the Ontario Government had aided the efforts of private parties by granting bonuses.

The bill respecting the licensing of undertakers and embalmers, introduced by W. H. Hearst, Sault Ste. Marie, was given its second reading and referred to committee. The mover explained that it provided for the appointment by the Government of a board of five men to examine candidates intending to engage in the business.

Suffocated by Wrappings.

Montreal, March 7.—The act of her parents in wrapping her up too closely for protection from the cold, caused the death of Marie Jeunesse Payette, aged 17 months.

The parents, who live at Pointe aux Trembles, drove to see their brother-in-law. They wrapped the child in blankets, then in a fur robe and placed her in the bottom of the sleigh, where she was again covered with the fur knee robe. On arriving at the destination the child was found suffocated.

May Extend Chelsea Piers.

Washington, March 7.—Secretary of War Dickinson yesterday granted a request of shipping and commercial interests of New York city for permission to extend two of the Chelsea piers one hundred feet in the North River to admit of docking great steamships. The extension will be experimental. The department engineers had reported against the request.

London, March 7.—Home Secretary Churchill stated in the House of Commons yesterday that the attention of the Government had been attracted to recent allegations of Mormon activity among the women of this country and had begun an investigation.

While he had no official information to support the assertions that young girls were being induced to emigrate to Utah, there was no doubt, the Secretary said, that the matter was causing deep concern, and he proposed to probe it exhaustively.

CAUGHT IN THE ICE

Fishing Schooner Imprisoned in Enormous Ice Fields—The Liner Shenandoah's Trip

A PERILOUS JOURNEY

Curling, Nfld., March 7.—A fishing schooner, now thought to have been the missing Gloucester schooner Ella M. Goodwin, was sighted in the ice off Bay of Islands several days ago, after the Gloucester fishing fleet sailed for home on Jan. 21 last. At that time the icebound craft was believed to be either the Aloha or the Bohemia, but as both of these vessels have reached port and the Goodwin is the only missing craft, the vessel is now believed by Newfoundland fishermen to have been the Goodwin. The ice in which the vessel was imprisoned was taken off shore on the night of Feb. 6, before a strong southeast breeze.

The Gulf of St. Lawrence is blocked with the heaviest kind of ice, and if the Goodwin is in its grip, she will probably not be free before the middle of April. There are plenty of provisions on board and the cargo of fresh herring will afford the crew a constant—if somewhat tedious—food supply.

The schooner is commanded by Capt. James D. Goodwin, a native of Pubnico, and the first mate is Capt. Louis Devine, a native of Barrington, N.S. The others on board when she left Gloucester, Nov. 16, were: John L. Nicholson, cook, a native of Pubnico; Thomas Prior of Bremen, Me.; Albert Blair, Lunenburg, N.S.; Oscar Larkin, Pubnico; Nat Quinlan, Cape Island, N.S.; Alexander Tarr, Liverpool, N.S.; Joseph Brer and Jos. Reed, Newfoundlanders.

Steamer's Hard Voyage.

Halifax, March 7.—The steamship Shenandoah arrived Sunday from London via St. John's, Nfld., after encountering one of the greatest fields of ice that ever floated on the Atlantic. The Shenandoah left London on Thursday, Feb. 16. Heavy northwest and westerly gales prevailed until she arrived at St. John's. On Monday, Feb. 27, when 260 miles east of Newfoundland, the ship plowed into a tremendous field of ice, in which were eight huge bergs, so perilous was her position that it was necessary to lay to all night.

Proceeding on her journey next morning, little progress was made, as she was compelled to completely alter her course to avoid the ice. It was impossible, however, to escape it all and she plowed through many miles of it. So far as the eye could reach nothing but ice could be seen. Anchors were lowered and she remained outside St. John's all night.

The Shenandoah sailed from St. John's on Sunday morning and encountered ice most of the way to Halifax.

May Not Suspend Advances.

Washington, March 7.—Denial of the request of the railways of official classification territory that they be permitted to suspend proposed advances in class freight rates from March 15 until Nov. 1 next, was made by the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday.

In the decision announced in the great rate cases ten days ago, the commission directed that the proposed tariffs advancing rates be annulled on or before March 10. If this direction were not forwarded, the commission announced that on that date it would issue an order cancelling the rate and putting into effect for at least two years the existing rates.

To-day at the New York Central offices in New York City, a general meeting of eastern railway officials will be held, at which the participants in yesterday's conference will make their report. It is probable that a decision will be reached to cancel the proposed advances in accordance with the direction of the commission and in the light of developments let the future take care of itself.

GOOD REASONS

For Demanding the Original Remedy, Newbro's Herpicide

If you knew it, you would not willingly accept counterfeit money. Instead, you would probbaly raise a disturbance and seek some means of redress.

Why then accept a preparation said to be "just as good as Newbro's Herpicide?" You know it is a counterfeit, an imitation of the real thing. You want the original dandruff germ destroyer, Herpicide, and you can get it, too, if you insist.

Redress is always possible in such an instance. The most effective method is to trade where you get what you ask for and no suggestions offered.

With the death of the dandruff germ the hair stops falling and is permitted to resume its natural growth and beauty. Such results follow the use of Newbro's Herpicide. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

A counterfeit article is never "just as good." Herpicide is sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications may be obtained at all good barber shops and hair dressers.

Send 10c. in postage for sample and booklet on the care of the hair to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

DID LAWYERS GET IT?

Dublin Suit Involves Prominent Seattle Men.

Dublin, March 7.—Timothy Healy appeared yesterday as counsel for the petitioner in lunacy proceedings, in which an effort was made to establish that American lawyers had obtained for themselves the greater part of a large estate to which a Dublin saddler was legally entitled. The case came up before the registrar in lunacy and a jury on a petition of E. Corcoran, who sought to have his father, Edward Corcoran, the saddler in question, declared insane.

Mr. Healy said that if the elder Corcoran had his rights he would be worth $250,000. Instead, he had been found with the last three months in a squalid Dublin lodging house, unable to give an account of himself. Mr. Healy said that Corcoran's cousin, John Sullivan, died in Seattle in 1909, intestate. An American lawyer came to Dublin and, continued the counsel, seeing he had an easy mark, grossly misrepresented the value of the estate Corcoran signed away his right to half the property to a man named Lewin he had never seen for $250. Altogether Corcoran got about $6,000. "The rest of it," asserted Mr. Healy, "is sticking in the pockets of solicitors."

Syndicate Got It.

Seattle, Wash., March 7.—Edward Corcoran, who was adjudged heir to the $500,000 estate of John Sullivan, a Seattle pioneer, was in feeble health when he visited Seattle two years ago. The property went into the possession of a syndicate of Seattle men, headed by former U. S. Senator Piles. The syndicate paid Corcoran a small sum of money for his rights in the estate.

Sold Rifle Range.

Winnipeg, March 7.—The Dominion Government has sold the St. Charles Rifle Range to a local syndicate for $133,000. This works out to about $600 per acre, and is regarded as a very fair price.

Manitoba Agricultural College.

Winnipeg, March 7.—The Carter-Aldinger Co. of Winnipeg has been awarded the contract for the new Manitoba Agricultural College, their bid being $229,000.

DANGER SEASON HERE

More Serious Sicknesses Have Their Origin in March Than in Any Other Month of the Year—Imperative Need of Fortifying the Body for the Relentless Ordeal It Must Undergo.

For sick and well alike, March is a perilous month. Do you feel weary and run down? Has your blood been thinned out by the long, tedious winter? Do you feel depressed and drowsy? Everyone of these is Nature's own warning that you are not in fit condition to stand the treacherous inroads of the raw, chilly weather to come. Grip and pneumonia are now at their height and the increase in deaths resultant from these diseases is most alarming.

For more than fifty years, Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has been the recognized remedy in the prevention of coughs, colds, grip, pneumonia, and all diseases so prevalent at this time of year. The secret of its marvelous success lies in the fact that it is the greatest strengthener and health-builder known to medicine. It not only fortifies the body against disease, but checks the ravages of any disease that may already be incurred. It overcomes all weakening, wasting and run-down conditions of the body, brain and muscles. It helps the stomach to more perfectly digest and assimilate food in order that more, richer and purer blood may come from it. It regulates and governs the heart action so that the circulation becomes strong and powerful, carrying health and vigor to every organ, and part of the human body.

The Duffy Malt Whiskey Company has received thousands of unsolicited testimonials from grateful patients who have been cured and restored to a sound, healthy, energetic condition. It is prescribed by leading doctors everywhere and used in hospitals whenever a gentle tonic and stimulant is needed. It is the only whiskey that was taxed as a medicine in the Spanish-American War—and every single bottle is guaranteed absolutely pure.

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

P. E. Blondin Makes Serious Charges Against Another Member of Parliament—Remarkable Scene

CHARGES GRAFT

Ottawa, March 7. P. E. Blondin (Conservative, Champlain), upon his responsibility as a member of Parliament, made a direct charge in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon upon Adelard Lanctot (laberal, Richelieu). Mr. Lanctot was building a house in Sorel last year. He was called out of town before the decorations were completed; he had painters from the Government shipyard at Sorel finish the work with material supplied by the Marine Department. In the formal charge which he read Mr. Blondin alleges "irregularities, abuses, frauds, malversations and robberies" had been committed. He said that goods had been "illegally and fraudulently" taken and conveyed to Mr. Lanctot's house; that workmen employed at the shipyard had, at the Government's expense, and during Government time, worked on the house of Mr. Lanctot; that the value of the material and time so taken would amount to $1,000 or $1,200.

The House was still, scarcely half the members were in their places when Mr. Blondin arose on a question of privilege to make his charge. There were a half dozen spectators in the gallery, and the attention paid to Blondin was apparently so indifferent that one would hardly have thought that he was making a serious accusation against a fellow member, which, if not substantiated would cost him his seat.

Mr. Blondin read his charge in English. He supported it by a number of affidavits by workmen, including the foreman, in French, and ended by asking that the matter be referred to the committees on privileges and elections. He made no comment whatever.

Mr. Blondin also read affidavits alleging widespread demoralization at the Sorel shipyard. These affidavits charge that work was done at Government expense on the house of a man named Lavelee, that a man named Masse sold cement from the Government stores to several persons, that two carloads of timber were sent from the shipyard to the house of a foreman named Lindsay, that during the last two years about $50,000 loss to the Government has been sustained at the shipyard. There are a great many charges of general corruption, and it is stated that there are some thirty affidavits more to corroborate the charges made by Mr. Blondin.

Mr. Lanctot listened attentively. His examination of the circumstances was equally brief as was that of his accuser. It was received with the same measure of silence that was tendered to Mr. Blondin. He had no objection to the charges going before the committee on privileges and elections. He courted a full investigation. He admitted building a house in Sorel in June last. Before it was completed he had been called away to attend his wife, who was lying ill at Saranac Lake. He did not have time to bring painters from any outside place to Sorel, and none could be had in the town except at the Marine Department shops, and the shops of the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. He went to an official of the Marine Department shops and asked him to send a few painters to finish the work when he could spare them, the men went up at various times between July and November. He also asked that an accurate account be kept of the time of the men. The paint, varnish and other materials used were replaced in both quantity and quality.

The men used to go and report at the shop, register their time and go to Mr. Lanctot's house. On several occasions he had asked for his account, but had been told it would be more convenient to send one bill for the whole amount when the work was completed.

When Mr. Lanctot concluded his explanation, he quietly left the chamber, and the motion was adopted without further discussion.

Mr. Lanctot stated that he had paid in full the account rendered to him by the Marine Department, although no specific sum was mentioned.

Richard Blain of Peel read in the House of Commons yesterday an Ottawa despatch from a paper which alleged that there was an abuse of patronage in the selection of the officers for the Canadian coronation contingent. That the selection of the officers had been placed in the hands of the local patronage committee, and that instead of a fine body of men the friends of the Government would be represented.

Sir Frederick Borden replied that the selection of the men was entirely in the hands of the officers commanding the respective corps from which they were to be taken. The headquarters' staff and the Minister had nothing whatever to do with it. No officers would be allowed to serve in a junior rank unless he was within the age limit of that rank, and no officers would be allowed to go as subalterns or privates.

Some regiments had met and passed resolutions. One Ottawa regiment had selected its officers, if an officer was to go from that regiment. Forty-eight officers would be chosen, thirty-six from the militia and the others from the permanent force. He described the despatch as a "tissue of falsehoods." The contingent would be 700 strong.

Just prior to the adjournment of the House of Commons last night Mr. Perley, the Chief Conservative Whip, on behalf of Mr. Borden, gave notice that the Opposition leader would on Wednesday next move a hoist of the consideration of the whole arrangement, pending its adoption or rejection by the United States Senate, which meets in special session on April 4.

The text of the Conservative leader's notice of motion is as follows:—"As the pending reciprocity proposals have not been carried into effect by the Congress of the United States at the sitting which has just terminated, he intends to move on Wednesday next for the postponement of the further consideration of these proposals in the Parliament of Canada."

Two Lives Lost.

Lakeview, N.C., March 7.—Two women lost their lives in a fire which destroyed the new Loch Crystal Hotel, a tourist resort just opened this season, early yesterday.

The fire was discovered about five o'clock and the flames so quickly spread through the large frame building that all effort to check them was futile. Miss Anna M. Barnes of New York, who was on the third floor, could not be rescued and was burned to death. Her body has not yet been recovered from the ruins.

Mrs. G. C. Pettis, an elderly woman of New Haven, Conn., while being rescued by her son, C. M. Pettis, sustained injuries and died from shock, together with the injuries an hour later.

Howard Whitmore, clerk in the hotel, saved many of the twenty-five guests. He is now confined to his bed from injuries received. Mrs. W. E. Youland, wife of the manager, was also badly burned. E. S. Woley of Detroit aided in the work of saving the guest. Those who escaped were only partially clad and lost all their belongings, including large amounts of money.

The Secretary Bird.

The secretary bird is so called because of the tuft of feathers over its ears, which much resembles the method generally adopted by clerks in disposing of their pens and pencils.

Odd Chinese Custom.

In China a jar placed on the roof of a house with the bottom end toward the street indicates that the daughter of the house is not yet of age to marry. As soon as she has developed into a marriageable maiden the jar is turned with its mouth toward the street. When the young lady gets married the jar is removed altogether.

Appreciation

1910 was a banner year with us, but 1911 carries even greater promise, because we have thousands of patients in this city and vicinity who are wearing glasses prescribed by us, many of whom could not be fitted elsewhere, and we know that they will not lose an opportunity of speaking a good word for us.

We take this occasion to acknowledge our indebtedness to our friends and patrons, our appreciation of their good will and faith in us, which have helped to make our success so great. We need not disguise the fact that we believe that we have deserved well of you. That if you have had confidence in us and have bestowed upon us your patronage it is because we have done something to warrant it. We have done "the best we could" and we purpose to keep right on doing so.

We are deeply grateful to our friends and customers for their loyalty. We ask for and hope to merit a continuance of the same.

SHE HAD CONSTANT PAIN

Until Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Dewittville, N.Y. — "Before I started to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I suffered nearly all the time with headaches, backaches, and bearing down pains, and had a continuous pain in my left side. It made me sick if I tried to walk much, and my back was so weak that I was obliged to wear corsets all the time. But now I do not have any of these troubles. I have a fine strong baby daughter now, which I did not have before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — MRS. A. A. GILES, Route 44, Dewittville, N.Y.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

"Miss Waring's Necklace"

By Beatrice Heron-Maxwell

"The life and the beauty of youth and of life, where lie they?
The charm of a smile, of a voice, of a touch, or a look,
When the lips and the hands and the eyes fold in death, how die they?
Since life is not death, though it close as the leaves of a book.
Look for life in the gems that she wore, in the lute that she played.
There the life will have stayed'"

"What a quaint looking thing," said Euthene, lifting a case that her brother had just placed in front of her. "What is it, Ray?"

"A neck ornament," answered Ray Waring, "about three thousand years old. It adorned, so the legend runs, a fair Grecian imported from old Hellene, who came, with her lover, to some tragic end."

It lay in Euthene's hand now, a frail-linked circlet of soft, beaten gold, wrought in graceful arabesques, and holding at intervals oval stones of a gray-green color, lustreless except for an intermittent sparkle when a polished edge caught the light. Pendant from the centre was a heart-shaped amulet of uncut emerald, with some cabalistic sign graven on it, worn smooth and illegible by time.

Euthene felt a little thrill of pleasurable excitement as she raised and clasped it round her neck, and her brother, looking at her, wondered why he had not realized sooner that, during his last three years of exploration, this only sister of his had changed from a plain girl into a pretty woman.

It came upon him now with a sort of surprise, and as he bent over her to see if the necklace clasp was secure, he noticed the satin smoothness of her cheek, the gold strands in her bronze hair, and the length and darkness of the lashes that fringed her eyes.

He wondered where he had seen eyes like hers before, so dark and softly brilliant, and decided it must have been during his travels: some starry-orbed houri of the East probably.

"It looks well on you, Thene," he said; and as she bent towards the mirror to see the effect herself, a little rose-flush tinged her usually pale cheeks, and her face brightened with a new vivacity.

"I like it," she said softly. "I shall wear it to-night and always."

She was dressed in something white and shining that fell round her tall figure in diaphanous folds, not a single flower or gem adorning her, except the necklace, which added a touch of barbaric significance to the primitive simplicity of her dress.

She looked strangely in keeping with her surroundings; rich Oriental stuffs and silks, jewelled ornaments and weapons, carvings, frescoes, curios of all kinds and ages, gathered by Ray Waring in his wanderings.

The characteristics that belonged to the Warings, of Woolston, were strongly marked in these two latest representatives of the race; nomadism on the man's side, insipidity on the woman's.

While Ray drifted about the world, adding to geography and science research, Euthene sat quietly within doors, at the old Dower House, sewing for the village children, or reading aloud some blameless literature for the benefit of Miss Grace Waring, a stranded derelict from the former generation.

Tonight, her brother's companionship had decided Euthene to go to the Hunt Ball, a festivity which did not yield her much pleasure as a rule; her want of attraction, or at least of the knowledge how to make herself attractive, condemning her to an insignificant place amongst the other and more prominent young women of the county. When she entered the ballroom, therefore, and walked up to the dais at the end of it, by her brother's side, she attributed the slight stir that accompanied them to the fact that it was Ray's first appearance since his return, and that the papers in detailing his discoveries had made him a celebrity even in his own country.

The sensation, however, was not on his account. "Who is that lady?" asked the Duke of Mexfield, gazing at her with unfeigned admiration. Sir James Lepell, his host, looked about with blank politeness, unable to grasp the idea that Miss Waring could be an object of interest.

"I mean the girl in white," said the Duke impatiently. "I should like to be introduced." And Sir James found himself, to his own and everyone's amazement, presenting his Grace, by request, to Miss Waring.

As the Duke, bowing, took her programme and wrote his name on it, all eyes were turned upon them with a sudden electrical recognition of some mysterious attraction in her. She seemed quite unmoved by this universal attention. A slow, sweet smile hovered round her lips, and in her eyes was a singular fire, slumbering, yet vivid.

"Is it possible that can be Miss Waring?" asked Colonel Latham, whose memory had hitherto failed him, after each annual introduction to her.

The girl to whom he spoke, Mabel Devereux, whose appreciation of her own charms admitted no rival claims, answered with bored insolence: "Yes, that is Euthene Waring. A dowdy little person, is she not? The sort of girl one easily forgets."

Colonel Latham's glance dwelt with transient contempt on the pretty trivial face raised to his, and then travelled on again to Miss Waring. "I hope she will remember me," he said. "I must go and secure a dance before her card is filled up."

And he hastened away, followed by an astonished and offended look from his late partner.

"Her card filled up!" echoed Miss Devereux. "She sits out half the evening generally. Are all the men losing their heads?"

Her disdainful question was answered before the evening was ended. The men had all lost their heads over the same person apparently—Euthene Waring. Her success was so extraordinary that its effect on any other woman would have perhaps been disastrous, but to Euthene, with her strange new gift of fascination, had come an absence of self-consciousness and a gentle yet imperial dignity that transformed the admiration she was receiving into a homage that was hers by right.

When the hour for departure came and she was driving away with her brother, leaving the Duke of Mexfield and Colonel Latham standing bareheaded on the steps, gazing after her, Ray Waring said, with an amused laugh, "I feel quite distinguished! You did not tell me, Thene, that my little sister had become the belle of the county. I am home just in time."

But Euthene only smiled that faint fleeting smile, new to her lips, and said nothing.

Her fingers stole to the necklace and touched it fondly, and when she fell asleep that night, no memories of her triumph disturbing the placidity of her white brow, the gray-green stones still shone with fitful glimmer round her neck, and the amulet rose and fell with the tranquil beating of her heart.

The following day two callers of importance came to Woolston—the Duke of Mexfield and Colonel Latham, each bringing an offering for Miss Waring. Euthene betrayed no embarrassment either at their presence or at their gifts. She received the posy of rare orchids frmo Ivor Latham's hothouse, with the same glance of gratitude that she accorded to the exquisite jewelled fan which the Duke had ventured to substitute for her own, broken during one of the dances with him.

She talked first to one and then to the other, with the same air of a queen receiving her subjects; and only when they walked, on either side of her, through the conservatories, did an incident occur which seemed to be a favorable augury on Ivor Latham's side. They had all stopped to admire an orchid, of a kind for which Woolston was celebrated, and Euthene, after picking one of the blossoms, let it fall carelessly at Ivor's feet.

He picked it up, his dark handsome face flushing, and said in a low voice: "May I keep it?"

Euthene, merely bowing assent, passed on, addressing her next remark to the Duke while Ivor, lingering, fastened the flower in his button hole.

When he rejoined them, a look of challenge, swift but mutual, flashed between him and Mexfield. From that moment they were declared rivals, Euthene's apparent unconsciousness and disregard of the fact only adding to the keenness of their contest.

Other men who had seen Miss Waring and been attracted by her at the ball, came to Woolston, as the days went on, but, aware of her indifference and their own lack of claim, retreated, leaving these two in the foreground, the Duke's rank and possessions pitted against Ivor Latham's personal superiority. It remained to be seen whether Euthene would choose a coronet, accompanied by a suitor insignificant in appearance and mind, or this brilliant soldier whose good birth and looks and splendid achievements made up, in many people's eyes, for a moderate fortune and estate.

It had been rumored vaguely before the Hunt Ball, that Mabel Devereux was setting her cap at Colonel Latham, and people had wondered whether he would succumb to the daring bait of a pretty face and a well-acted ingenuousness of manner.

Mabel herself had assumed an air of proprietorship with him, which he had noticed without taking the trouble to resent, but which he now made null and void by avoiding her society on all occasions.

To her vain, self-indulgent nature, this neglect was unbearable, and her jealousy of Euthene grew to white heat when she heard that not a day passed without Colonel Latham being seen at Miss Waring's side. If he were not actually at Woolston, he would be dancing attendance on her in the village—at a concert, on the way to church here, there and everywhere.

And as faithful in his devotion to her was the Duke of Mexfield.

"I shall go to Woolston," announced Mabel, "and discover for myself what this wonderful new fascination is that has captivated the two most eligible men in the place." So she went to Woolston.

Euthene was holding her court that day, in her brother's room, and when Miss Devereux arrived was playing on some soft stringed, old-world instrument, and chanting a barbaric song to her absorbed listeners.

She made a strangely attractive picture, sitting on a stool of carved ivory, her dress of some dull red stuff, with touches of gold embroidery harmonizing with the Eastern coloring of her surroundings. One would have said that she was a beautiful sorceress of ancient days casting Circean spells on those around her, and watching their effect with the mysterious smile which had become a characteristic of her face. She stretched out a white hand to Mabel Devereux, and even in clasping it the girl felt a wild access of jealousy and of some other emotion which was akin to fear.

Neither the Duke nor Colonel Latham seemed pleased at the interruption, and presently, when the desultory conversation flagged, the Duke begged that Euthene would fulfil a promise already given, and dance to him. She demurred for a moment, then agreed, making the condition that her brother should come and accompany her steps on the instrument she had just been playing.

"What are you going to dance?" Ray asked, laughing at this new role of his sister's: "a minuet or a cachoucha?"

"Neither; it is one of my own invention. You may play like this." And catching up the instrument she ran her fingers over the strings in a melody that was both plaintive and sweet.

If Mabel had doubted the reality of her rival's attractions before, it would assuredly have needed only the sight of Euthene dancing to slay any lingering disparagement of them.

The wild free grace of movement, the perfection of pose and gesture, the exquisite transition from virginal reserve to an equally virginal abandonment, combined to make the dance a sonnet of living poetry, and when it ended and Euthene sank on a couch, while the melody trembled into silence, both men went eagerly towards her, each expressing the uncontrollable admiration he felt.

Mabel could endure it no longer; with a brief word of commendation, so chilling as to resemble reproof, she took her leave, deliberately omitting to say good-bye to Colonel Latham, who was holding the door open for her exit.

"Don't trouble, Mr. Waring," she said, when Ray volunteered his services. "Colonel Latham will see me to my carriage. I have a message to give him."

"What is the message?" Ivor asked, as he followed her through the hall.

She stopped, saying in a low voice, "When are you going to marry Miss Waring?"

He looked round, fearing a listener to so indiscreet a remark, his hand some face clouding with vexation at her impertinence.

"Pardon me," he said, "that is our affair. The subject cannot possibly have any interest for you."

"Oh," she answered, "I assure you it is one in which everybody is interested. We all want to know whom to congratulate you, or the Duke. Euthene has given us to understand that it is merely a question of her choice!"

He looked straight into her eyes, the scorn in his showing her how well he recognized this manoeuvre—a favorite one with Miss Devereux, which had more than once been successful in turning a vacillating suitor against the object of his suit.

"I can scarcely believe that Miss Waring would choose you for her confidante," he said contemptuously. "In any case you must excuse my doing so. Good-bye, Miss Devereux," and as he turned on the doorstep and went back, Mabel understood that she had lost the game.

"I will have my revenge," she murmured to herself, as the carriage door was closed and she drove away. "He might have been mine, but for her—she will pay for him dearly." For to such mean, vain, frivolous natures, every man is a possible husband, to be fought for, every woman is a deliberate rival, to be fought against.

It was only a week later that the countryside was startled by the discovery that both the Duke and Ivor Latham had left Woolston under circumstances that seemed to point to their having gone abroad to fight a duel.

The announcement in the papers, two days afterwards, that Colonel Latham had met with a serious, and possibly fatal accident, while fencing at a School of Arms in Brussels, seemed to confirm this rumour. Euthene Waring had been invisible to callers for some days; her brother, it was said, had started hurriedly for the Continent, and every fresh detail added to the reports which were now rife.

Mabel Devereux, whose weak temperament had lost its balance in the injury to her pride, drove once more to Woolston, and, without asking for admission, made her way by the garden to the room dedicated to Ray, which she knew was most frequented by his sister.

Euthene was there, her beautiful face buried in her arms, in an abandonment of grief, weeping, as Mabel felt sure, for the lover whom her waywardness had sent to his death.

"It is true then," said Mabel, running up to her and laying a violent hand on her shoulder. "He is dying—or dead—and you have killed him. Not content with taking him from me, you have sent him away to be stabbed—murdered by the Duke."

Euthene had risen to confront her. Even in her overwhelming grief, the queenly beauty and dignity which had come to her, shone resplendent and unmarred.

"You are right," she said; "it is I who have killed him, but since his death has taught me that I love him, it will be easy for me to go where he has gone."

She laid her fingers on the amulet, at her neck, and Mabel saw with amazement that the grey-green stones, formerly lustreless, were brilliant now as opals, and flashed red gleams from their iridescent hearts.

Maddened by her jealous rage, she snatched at the necklace, crying out that she hated it, and that if it had brought success to Euthene in the past, it should not do so in the future.

For a moment Euthene strove to hold her back; then, as a stir and sound of approaching footsteps showed that they were going to be disturbed, she paused to listen, a light of hope flashing into her eyes.

And in that instant Mabel had wrested the necklace from her and stood triumphantly holding it in her hand.

With a strange low cry, Euthene staggered backwards, putting her hand to her head, and as the door opened and Ray advanced, he caught her in his arms, or she would have fallen.

Her face had turned gray and wan, her lips were drawn, her eyes hollow, and she was gazing at him with an agonized enquiry in them which her voice refused to utter.

"I was just in time," stammered Ray. "I gave him your message before—before he died, Thene."

Her eyes closed, and the shadows round them deepened. He lifted her and carried her to a sofa, and as he did so, caught sight, for the first time, of Mabel. Transfixed with horror at the awful change that had come to Euthene, she stood, the necklace in her hand, its broken links testifying to the violence with which she had despoiled her rival of it.

Some glimmer of the truth seemed to dawn on Ray, and with a stride he reached her, snatched the necklace from her, and bade her begone and send someone to his sister.

Then, kneeling, he tenderly passed the broken circlet round Euthene's throat, and pressed the gaping links together—but as he did so, he realized that her spirit had flown at the moment when her beauty fell from her like a garment, and that her life had flashed out with the departing gleam of the dull gray-green stones that lay now like dead gems on the whiteness of her neck. But as the hours went on, an ineffable sweetness and serenity stole gradually over the still face of Euthene; the lips, beautiful again, as in life, parted with their strange hovering smile, and such a majesty of loveliness descended upon her as made her wonderful frozen beauty a marvel to behold.

The Duke of Mexfield, who had braved all risks of whispered comments to gaze upon her face once more, said, as he stood beside her, with Ray, "One can scarcely believe that such perfection lived and breathed. Oh God! If only she could live and breathe again! I see she wears still the necklace that she loved—your gift. How dim the stones are; one would almost think that they had some secret affinity with her."

But Ray held his peace, for a belief had come to him, so strong as to be almost knowledge, that the necklace retaining some vital physic force of its primitive long-dead owner, had imbued Euthene, whose magnetic temperament thrilled responsively, with the weird charm and glamour belonging to the woman of an ancient race.

"STRANDED"

By Mrs. George Corbett

I.

"My dear Miss D'Alroy, whatever is the matter? Has something serious happened?".

When Winnie D'Alroy heard herself thus spoken to, she raised her tear-stained face, and surveyed her interrogator as entreatingly as though she thought him able to banish her trouble.

"It's all that horrid Mr. Pleine," she sobbed, giving way to a fresh outburst of grief. "I've only twopence left, and I don't know whatever I shall do."

"Well, twopence isn't much, to be sure; but the 'ghost' walks to-day, you know, and that will soon put things right."

"No, Mr. Creighton, that is just where you are mistaken. I expected the ghost to walk to-day, and that is where I was mistaken, too."

"Good Heavens! You don't mean to say that Pleine has bilked us?"

"Indeed I do. He put us all off last Saturday with the promise of a fortnight's treasury to-day, and we all believed he meant it. But instead of paying us, he has gone away with every penny of our takings, and left us to look after ourselves—perhaps to starve, for all he cares."

"Stranded, by Jove! Before we are half way through the tour, too! Just wait here, Miss D'Alroy, while I go inside to make a few inquiries."

As Fred Creighton gave this injunction, he was about to leave the little room behind the stage entrance in order to hurry upstairs to the office in which he had expected to receive a fortnight's treasury, but altered his mind when he heard a great clattering, caused by the descent of several people who seemed to be very much excited.

Another moment and a group of players appeared on the scene.

The men were loud and angry. The women tremulous and tearful. And the whole party was in a state of anxious wonderment concerning what had better be done next.

"Hello, Creighton, so you've turned up, have you?" inquired big, good-humored Larry Moore, the "Hibernian Comedian." "We weren't sure but that you had hooked it along with Pliene, when you were unpunctual for treasury."

"Pleine was not so easily disposed towards me as to make an exception in my favor when everybody else was being swindled," was Fred's grave retort; "but I do not exactly understand the situation even yet."

"It's easy enough to understand, old man. The manager has cleared out with the cash, and the Concordia Comedy Company has at present only one desire—to smash the fellow's head. Certainly, it might be more satisfactory to secure a fresh engagement, but we are none of us likely to manage that till we get back to London."

"London!" echoed several voices at once, and two or three of the ladies put their handkerchiefs to their eyes again.

"How can we possibly get back to London without money?" inquired De Vere, the 'Heavy Old Gentleman' of the company, who looked as if the end of the world had almost come for him

"Well, that is a bit awkward," admitted Larry, running his finger meditatively through his tumbled chestnut hair; "but we'll never say die till we're forced. There must be some way out of the difficulty."

"Suppose you show it to us," suggested Thurton Brown, whose salary could always be computed in shillings by the number of lines he was called upon to speak at each representation of the plays in which he took a part. As his speaking part had never exceeded eighteen "lines," Thurton Browne may be excused for not having a little nest egg to fall back upon when he found himself cast adrift with neither money nor occupation.

"Well," was Larry's cheerful answer, "we're all intolerably good health. And some of us are first-rate walkers."

"Larry, don't be an ass," growled Browne. "Think of something better than going on tramp."

"There is another course, which might possibly prove useful to some of us."

"And what is that?"

"Write to our relations, tell them the fix we are in, and ask them to come to the rescue."

"You are only wasting valuable time, Larry. Some of us haven't any relations. And the rest—well, speaking for myself, that expedient has been overdone already."

"My relations could help me, and they would help me, too," interpolated Florence Ferrars, the beauty of the company, "but I would die before I would ask them."

"Why?"

"Because this is just the sort of thing they predicted when I scandalized them by insisting on joining the profession, and I really couldn't stand all the 'I told you so's' by which they would punctuate their help."

"But how are you going to manage without somebody's help?"

"I shall have to raise money on some of my bits of jewellery, and trust to Providence to be able to redeem them when better times come. If I can muster enough to pay for my lodgings and for my railway ticket, I am not afraid of what will happen in London. I can go back to my old digs, and I've been promised an introduction to Mr. Edmonds."

This last announcement was given rather triumphantly, and Winnie D'Alroy glanced with a shade of envy at the beautiful girl whose chances of success were so much greater than her own would ever be.

"Yes, Flossie, you certainly are too good-looking for a twaddly little touring company like this has been," was Larry's opinion; "but you must excuse me for saying that though lovely women are the rule, not the exception, at the Jollity, it is a fact that the supply is pretty constant. The manager may not exactly be waiting for your arrival, and—"

But Miss Ferrars was too disgusted to remain and listen to another word from Larry.

"Good afternoon, everybody," she interrupted. "I mean to catch the 5.35 express, so I've no more time to waste."

"Anyhow, that is one of us provided for," exclaimed Larry, as Flossie passed out into the street.

"It seems to me that several of the company are equally well off," opined De Vere. "Nowell and Tredegar a dnthe Sisters Vane have all slipped quietly away. That means that they have thought of some way out of the difficulty."

"Right you are!" exclaimed Larry, after taking a rapid survey of the remainder of the company. "That leaves only five of us to be disposed of now. Browne, I suppose you have nothing that you can raise the wind on?"

"And Miss D'Alroy owns to the possession of the sum of twopence," added Creighton. "That won't go far towards paying her fare from Rushton to London."

The very idea was so ridiculous that everybody laughed, and henceforth a more cheerful tone pervaded the debate.

"And how are you off for tin, De Vere?" inquired Fred.

"To tell the truth," admitted "the heavy old gentleman," whose anxiety was manifesting itself in a constantly growing inability to keep still. "To tell the truth, my finances are about as low as Miss D'Alroy's. I've only had two guineas a week, less agent's commission, and I've screwed every penny I coul out df it for the little woman at home. I'm strong and healthy, and wouldn't worry much if there was only myself to think about; but it's hard lines on Millie—her baby isn't a week old yet."

De Vere was a strong man, as he had said, but there was a queer catch in his voice, and his eyes suddenly filled with tears, as he thought what Mr. Pleine's rascality might mean to his delicate young wife, for whom the doctor had prescribed the best of nourishment if she was to have a chance of recovering her strength.

For quite a minute there was silence. For here was suddenly revealed the depth of tragedy, and even Winnie D'Alroy's self-pity was swamped in sympathy for the greater griefs of poor De Vere.

"I'm so sorry," she faltered tremulously, tears of genuine pity running down her cheeks. "My trouble is nothing besides yours. I wish I could be of use."

"I say, Fred, just come outside a minute," interrupted Larry. "I've a word or two to say to you in private."

Fred, glad to cut the painful scene short, promptly did as he was asked, and for several minutes the two young men conversed earnestly together, while Winnie D'Alroy, Tom De Vere, and Thurton Browne looked silently at each other, or at the floor, until the stagedoor keeper pressed himself upon their notice.

"Very sorry, miss. Very sorry, gents," he observed, "but you can't stop and live here, you know. There's not going to be no performance to-night, and you are the last people in the theayter. I'm only waitin' for you to go, and then I shall fasten up and go home too—so don't keep me waitin' longer than you can help."

"You dry up!" growled Larry, who with Fred had stepped inside again. "We shall clear out of this when we are ready, and not a minute sooner."

Larry looked too big and too strong to argue with. So the doorkeeper retired to his box, and waited with what scant patience he could muster.

"We've managed things beautifully," continued Larry, turning to the disconsolate "heavy old gentleman." "Fred and I have more resources than we imagined, and we think we can get you three off to town to-night. We are not in a great hurry ourselves, and intend to stay in Rushton a few days longer. We haven't the money with us, but will fetch it here for you. It won't take us long to go to our lodgings for it, and we'll be back in half an hour."

Thankful protestations of gratitude greeted this announcement, but Fred and Larry did not stop to listen to them, being in a hurry to transact the business they had decided upon.

They were absent from the theatre much more than the half hour they had mentioned, and found their three stranded friends waiting for them in the street.

"The stagedoor keeper got impatient an dcheeky," said Thurton Browne. "So we came outside."

"Well, you haven't much time to spare, if you mean to start for London to-night," admonished Larry. "So take your fare, and be off. Browne, aren't your digs close to Miss D'Alroy's?"

"Yes, next door," was the reply.

"Then you can look after her luggage, and see her into the train. And don't forget that you'll all need to get a tea-basket en route, for you won't have time for a meal before you start. You'll all have enough to see you home."

"But," inquired De Vere, as a little packet of money was handed to each of the trio. "About paying this back? You must give us your permanent addresses."

"Nonsel Don't discount our friendly efforts by turning the minto a busines transaction. We can both afford the trifling present, and we'll cry quits for comradeship's sake. And—a—De Vere, we've taken the liberty of adding a sovereign as our present to the baby. Ta-ta, old man. Good-bye, Browne. Cheer up, Miss D'Alroy, you'll soon get another engagement. Come along, Fred. I'm going to have a big tuck-in at that restaurant in the High Street.

II.

Fred Creighton and Larry Moore walked briskly away from the theatre down the steet, and then round the corner, in an opposite direction to that which was being taken by the three comrades whom they had delivered from a terrible dilemma. Nor did they slacken their pace until they were sure that none of the members of the Concordia Comedy Company were likely to see them. Then they stopped suddenly, loked at each other, and began to laugh, though it must be confessed that their laughter lacked the ring of genuine mirth.

"Well, we've made a fine hash of our own affairs," observed Larry, diving both hands to the bottom of his pockets, as if he would fain assure himself that they were not quite so empty as he had believed. "What are we going to do?"

"I haven't had time to think about that yet," was the answer, given with an anxiously puckered brow. "Half a dosen pawn tickets won't help us much."

"No, but it's a comfort to know that we've been able to get the others out of their scrape. I was sorry that we could only raise five shillings each over their actual expenses for Winnie and Browne."

"Yes, it's a tight fit for them; but they will be able to reach home, and they won't imagine that we are quite skinned out, as we were the two best paid members of the company."

"Oh, things are not so bad as that, sonny. I'm not quite skinned out. I still have sixpence left, just enough for hal fa pie apiece."

"With nothing to wash it down!"

"With nothing to wash it down, old man."

Both Fred and Larry pulled a wry face at this; but they were master hands at adapting themselves to circumstances, and this was not the first time they had visited Queer Street together.

So they went into a cheap restaurant, enjoyed their pie without anything gto wash it down, and then indulged in a cigarette each.

During their smoke they discussed various methods of overcoming the difficulties of the immediate future, only to reject one after the other as utterly unfeasible.

It was a foregone conclusion that no professional engagement need be looked for in Ruston. And, unfortunately, the histrionic art was the only one with which the two young men had anything like an intimate acquaintance. To go back to their lodgings, and expect more credit before they had paid the bill they already owed, was also out of the question, for their landlady, Mrs. Willins, had a very circumscribed opinion concerning the wisdom of trusting "pro.'s" too much. She had, furthermore, learned from private sources of information, to which she was in the habit of having recourse, in the interests of the habit ofetsointh the interests of self-defnece, that the Concordia Comedy Company did not appeal to the taste of Rustonian theatre-goers, and that to book it for twelve nights had been a ridiculous error of judgment on the part of both manager an dlessee.

Against defaulters she had a partial remedy in the detention of their luggage, whenever they had any, until the amount of their debt was forthcoming, and neither of her recent lodgers was likely to be made an exception to the rule.

It will be seen that their plight was a very serious one, fro all their spare clothes were at their lodgings, and their jewellery was in the hands of a pawnbroker. Nor had they another penny wherewith to purchase a meal or a night's lodging.

The theatre, so called, was of such a ramshackle order, that none of the company had cared to leave any of their possessions therein overnight, and none of them had taken anything with them when they went to draw the salary that was due them. So, unless they could satisfy Mrs. Willins the two chums must dispense protem with everything except the clothes they stood in, plus several pawn tickets, and two nearly empty cigarette cases and similar trifles of no great immediate use.

On leaving the restaurant where they had dined at threepence per head, they walked aimlessly along the streets, which were becoming thronged with eager multitudes of working people to whom Saturday night brings opportunity for spending the money that has been earned during the week. Everybody seemed to have some definite purpose in view, and shoppers and shopkeepers all looked as if they enjoyed the gaslit scenes of bustle, noise and confusion.

"Nobody but us seems too poor to have a copper to spend," remarked Fred, as he watched the brisk business that was being done by peripatetic vendors of whelks, fried fish, and peace pudding. "Even the couple that were howling at the top of the street as we came along are going in heavily for refreshments now."

Fred did not begrudge anybody the ability to purchase refreshments, or anyhting else, if they were so inclined; but if one's pockets are empty the sight of this ability in others is apt to have a somewhat depressing effect on the mind, and it is not surprising that the young fellow was reduced to a rather pensive condition.

"Yes, by Jove! And wasn't it howling too?" inquired Larry, more by wa yof talking than of propounding a question that required answering. "Yet they call it singing, I suppose. And just listen to that!"

That was the voice of an individual who was mutilating the latest comic song in tones which were intended to be impressively musical, but which sent a shudder through the finely attuned nerves of at least two listeners.

Fred's eyes lighted up with sudden resolution.

"Larry," he said, "we could do better than that."

Comprehension came instantaneously to Larry, who replied promptly:

"Yes, we could do better than that."

"But where? Street business will hardly do."

"No, it's overdone already; but we might try the pubs. We should have a better chance of being heard there, and it is just possible that colliers and factory hands can really appreciate good music when they hear it."

"It's a rapid come down, Larry. Yesterday we were leading men. To-day we—well, of course, we are bound to do something—or starve."

"And as we are not inclined to do the latter ,we will start at once, while our courage is warm. Come on, Fred."

Three doors further down the street was a public house, in which the two friends somewhat to their own astonishment, found themselves listened to with rapt attention. They were both prosperous looking and well dressed, and at first, landlord and customers alike imagined their vocal efforts to be the result of either a bet or a joke on their part.

But, after Fred's exquisite rendering of "Tom Bowling" had been supplemented by an equally successful delivery of "Father O'Flynn" by Larry, a burly collier jumped up, and passed his hat round.

"Aw never yerd sich singin' i' aw my loife!" he ejaculated. "Nor yo noather so aw think it's only meet it should be paid for."

"An' so do aw," agreed the landlord, promptly endorsing his opinion by dropping a shilling into the hat.

His contribution was followed by the more modest offerings of his customers, one of whom suggested that the gentlemen would perhaps oblige them again.

Greatly encouraged, the two friends sang one song after another, and eventually left that particular house the richer by four and fivepence each.

GAS, INDIGESTION AND HEARTBURN GO

Makes Your Out-of-order Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

The question of how long you are going to continue a sufferer from indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapepsin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs, but a re-enforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak stomachs should take a little Diapepsin occasionally and there will be no more indigestion no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, or heartburn, Sour risings Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach, and, besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapepsin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel like life is worth living.

Children Often Need a laxative—but you cannot be too careful what you give them. Harsh purgatives injure the bowels and pave the way for life-long trouble. The new

JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

1—When Jack and Jill went up the hill, what should be on top this time but
The magician's magic lamp you see,
Which he'd forgotten, carelessly.

2—So Jack and Jill immediately wished for something. Said Jack, "Why couldn't we go to the moon?" "Of course you can," remarked the Lamp, and started very soon.

3—And in a little while they reached Old Luna, but he had his mouth open and Jack and Jill were clear inside it!

4—Well, inside there it was something like a nightmare in the holiday season. Horrible faces were everywhere. You wouldn't think it of the old moon. He looks such a quiet old boy.

5—Then the Tots got scared properly on the other side of the moon. "Oh, dear," said Jill, "I wish we did'n't have that old lamp!" And immediately she'd said it the Old Lamp lit out from Jack and Jill came tumbling through space, head over heels——

6—So Jack came down and broke his crown
And Jill came tumbling after.
It wasn't very funny for a little pair of us,
And you mustn't think the matter ons nor laughter.

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—Oh, see the little Trumpeter who flits above the sea,
And bugles for the Tiny Tads, who stand beneath the tree.

2—"We'll go and see some other things," the Tiny Tads declare,
"Perhaps some big Condorgans will be flying in the air.

3—Then all at once they hear some notes quite sweet and emulous,
It is a Magpicano who is exercising thus.

Accordeonions they must be, for now he plays and sings.

Currants all filled with lovely jam and jelly we can eat."

QUEEN TO LAY A KEEL PLATE

Great Interest in Connection with the Royal Family's Approaching Visit to Portsmouth

Great preparations are being made at the Portsmouth naval station for the expected visit of King George and his family. According to present arrangements King George and Queen Mary, with the younger children, will visit that great naval centre about January 17th, and will remain in the harbor on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert for several days. There is great excitement among the naval officers and officials, a number of whom remember the King in his sailor days, and it is believed that, although the visit is to be entirely informal and almost private, Queen Mary will be asked to lay the first keel plate of the new mammoth super-Dreadnought, which will be christened the Royal George. Unlike King Edward, who took only a superficial but patriotic interest in the Navy, King George follows every new step made by the Admiralty with the most intense eagerness, and he is already in possession of the secret designs of the new ships to be laid down next year. He is also very alive to the grievances of the "lower deck," and when at Portsmouth he is expected to pay a number of visits to the naval barracks, the dockyard, and various establishments outside the port.

TO WIPE OUT THE LOW NECKS

Queen Mary Has Started a Crusade Against Them, and "High Necks" Will be Good Etiquette

Queen Mary, whose habits and ideas are very puritanical in every way, has decided upon a crusade against the low-necked evening dress, and in this she has the full support of King George. During the reign of King Edward, and even under Queen Victoria, the court dresses of ladies were cut as low as possible, but Queen Mary has a great dislike for this fashion, and she has made it clear to the ladies of her household that if a dress is cut away at the neck at all it should be as little as possible. At the present time the edicts of the Court make it compulsory for low-necked dress to be worn on all "full-dress" occasions, but this will be greatly modified during the next few years. She prefers to introduce the innovation gradually, but she has already made it clear that elderly ladies and others, who desire to wear high-necked dresses at next season's courts may do so without infringing any detail of court etiquette.

LONG FLIGHT FOR AERONAUTS

The Aviation Meet to be Held in England Next Summer Includes a Thousand Mile Contest

Practical interest is already shown across the Channel in the international aviation contests, which are to be held in England during the coming summer. Most of the leading French flying men and aeroplane manufacturers have made arrangements to be present, including M. Louis Blerio, who, although not a competitor, will attend both the Gordon Bennett Cup Race and the 1,000 miles contest round England. In each race M. Blerlot will have ready two or three gangs of mechanics, with full equipment, to assist all the competitors, independent of their nationality, who will ride Blerlot monoplanes. For the Gordon Bennett Cup flight the task will be easy enough, as the competition takes place in an aerodrome. As regards the 1,000 miles race, the gangs of mechanics will travel, alternately, twelve hours in advance of the competitors to each town on the itinerary, so as to be ready to make any repairs on the spot, and with the utmost dispatch.

HAVE STATE PAY ALL PHYSICIANS

Professor Moore, of Liverpool, Proposes to Establish a National Medical Service

To have the State pay all doctors' bills in the United Kingdom is the rather startling idea of Professor Benjamin Moore, of the Liverpool University. He proposes to substitute a national medical service for the present system "whereby a mob of 32,000 sweated and underpaid British doctors in private practice earn on an average less than $1,200 a year. An interesting point is that Professor Moore regards the foreshadowed legislation for invalidity insurance and Poor Law reform as a step towards his ideal of a national medical service. He estimates that for an expenditure of less than $50,000,000 a year for ten years the eradication of consumption, producing an annual saving of $105,000,000 to the nation, could be guaranteed. From the point of view of the medical profession, as well as the nation, Professor Moore makes out an attractive case for his scheme. The State would employ the 32,000 doctors at an annual average pay of $1,500 a year, total cost about $50,000,000 per year. They would no longer be sweated (as he says they are) by the friendly societies, tontines, etc., and their quarterly cheque from the State would relieve them of the annoyance and waste of time in sending out bills and hunting up debts, and allow them more leisure to keep in touch with the rapid progress of medical science. From the public point of view, he suggests that the gain would be immense.

NEW SKIRT MOBBED

Two Pioneers of the Harem Freely Rescued by Paris Policemen From a Jeering Crowd

Two pioneers of the much-talked-of Harem skirt who made a daring appearance on the Boulevard Bonne Nouvelle, had the unfortunate experience of being mobbed. The experiment was made by particularly stylish mannequins. The jupe-culotte, which consists of baggy trousers of light, delicate material, caught at the ankles, could not have been tried by two more beautiful women, but a noisy, jeering crowd at once surrounded them. They were in tears by the time they had sought refuge in a tea shop. The crowd increased in number in the hope of seeing the trousered women folk when they left the shop. Ten policemen arrived to maintain order, but the crowd lingered round the door until about eight o'clock in the evening, when, enveloped by the kindness of friends in long cloaks, the Pasha ladies emerged, and, protected on on each side by a policeman, were escorted to their homes.

The Harem skirt is being debated with some animation in Paris. Mme. Paquin says she has no models of the Turkish costume and has no intention of making any. In her opinion the Harem skirt will only be worn by women who wish to be remarked.

Mme. du Gast, the well-known sportswoman, says the idea of women wearing Zouave trousers is detestable to her.

Deepest Pit Shaft

Near the station there was a quiet commercial house that was patronised by a superior class of customers. Not at all sure of the reception they would get, but mindful of the necessity of increasing their store of cash, Larry and Fred entered the hotel, and after indulging in a well-earned glass of bitter ale each, began to sing "All's Well" an old duet that was a favorite of theirs.

When they had finished, the landlord approached them with a courteous question.

"Am I to understand that you gentlemen are singing for money?" he asked, in a tone that so appealed to Larry's confidence, that he promptly told him the whole story, suppressing only the fact that but for their own generosity to others, he and Fred could have travelled back to London very comfortably.

"I've heard of that sort of thing before," said Mr. Mathewson. "In fact, I have a little girl here now, who was left behind by a scoundrel who was touring a Children's Comic Opera Company. From what I have been able to gather, she has no relations who care to claim her, so my wife has been taking her in hand, hoping that she would show a taste for domestic work."

"And doesn't she?" inquired Fred.

"Bless you, no! She'll learn as much as you like from books, and she will give you recitations by the yard. But she won't do a scrap of housework, and openly avows her hatred of sewing. Now what is one to do with a child like that?"

"Send her on the stage, of course," was the amused opinion of both young men.

"I should like to see your youthful Juliet," added Larry.

"You cannot see her to-night, because she has gone to bed," Mr. Mathewson answered. "But there is no reason why you should not see her tomorrow. When do you expect to get back to London?"

"As soon as we have raised the wind," was the reply.

And then Mr. Matheson, who had been to see their performance during the week, and did not doubt their bona fides, made a welcome proposal to the two stranded actors.

"Look here," he said. "I've hit upon a good way of helping us all out of a difficulty. Next Monday we have a Free-and-Easy in our big clubroom, and on the following night we have an Anniversary dinner at which some good singing will be welcome. You want money. I want talent. Suppose we strike a bargain? If you will sing for me on those two evenings, an duse your best endeavours to make both concerts successful, I will board you here till Wednesday morning, and pay you enough to settle your landlady's bill, plus thirty shillings each for travelling expenses to London. What say you?"

Such a liberal offer could only evoke one answer—that of grateful acceptance, and the bargain was duly carried out to the satisfaction of all concerned. So also were various sequels which proved that Mr. Mathewson had not been mistaken in his estimate of the stranded actors, and his wife still boasts the possession of a black silk gown, which almost stands upright by virtue of its own richness, and which is proudly mentioned on special occasions as the joint gift of the gift of the great actor-managers, Messrs. Creighton and Moore.

And Juliet, the stranded little waif, whom the Mathewsons had also befriended, what of her?

Well between ourselves, dear reader, but in London, and wonderful things are predicted of the young actress, whose real name is Juliet Stainthorpe, but who is henceforth to be known as —No! on second thoughts I have resolved not to be too confidential about it, for neither she, nor one of the above mentioned successful actor-managers, to whom she is engaged to be married, might care to have it universally known that when they first met each other, it was in decidedly unprosperous circumstances, in a northern provincial town, where both of them had been left "stranded."

HOW CHRONIC COUGHS

Are Being Cured by Vinol—An Account of One Case

New Haven, Conn.—I was troubled with a most persistent chronic cough for a long time and had tried so many remedies and prescriptions without benefit that I was discouraged. I was persuaded by my friends to try Vinol. I must say that I had little confidence, but I made up my mind to give it a fair trial. Before I finished my first bottle of Vinol I commenced to notice an improvement in my general condition. After taking the second bottle, my cough left me, and I must say I never felt better in my life.—all due to the use of Vinol. I can also recommend Vinol to anyone in a run down condition as the best possible remedy." (Name furnished on request.)

It is the combined action of the medicinal elements of the cods' livers aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron which makes Vinol so efficient in curing chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis—at the same time building up the weakened, run-down system. Vinol contains no oil and tastes good.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

WEIR & O'BRIEN
ARCH WEIR JAMES O'BRIEN

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy has gone to Europe.

Several changes may take place in the British Cabinet.

The United States Democratic caucus met to formulate a program for the coming session.

Hamilton hotelkeepers have decided to increase rates on account of the Government tax on bar receipts.

Stephen Odor was sentenced at Hamilton to five years in penitentiary for running away with another man's wife and money.

It is stated that the British navy estimates show an increase of only $17,500,000, the call for new construction not being so insistent as had been anticipated.

John Steele and Stuart and Moffatt, are held by the Spokane police as the probably murderers of Capt. J. T. Sullivan, and alleged accomplices in a plot to kill President Taft.

Thomas Ecroyd, long known in the leather business, passed away at his home in Montreal Sunday night, at the advanced age of 89 years. He had retired from active business fifteen years ago.

There was a panic at the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, at 8.15 last night, when fire was discovered under the floor of the fever ward on the third floor of the building on the College street side. The damage was slight.

Fireman Dompierre had a narrow escape from asphyxiation at a fire in Quebec which occurred in a small house in St. Valier street last evening. After the fire had been extinguished he was found lying in a pool of water in an insensible condition.

Louis Breguet at Douai, France, yesterday, accompanied by two passengers, made a flight of 2100 kilometres (62 miles), in one hour and fifteen minutes. At Mourmelon, Nieuport, with one passenger, they covered 101 kilometers in one hour. Both are new records.

Jeered By the Radicals.

Paris, March 7.—The Ministerial declaration was read in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday. The conservative tone astonished the Socialists and extreme Radicals, who had been expected to support the new Government.

These members interrupted with jeering the reference in the manifesto to the church and schools, in which was stated "we will apply without feebleness and without violence the laws dealing with religious orders and the separation of the church and state. We will protect against all attack our public schools."

It is impossible to determine the precise strength of the Ministry in the Chamber until there is a test vote, which may not be taken to-day.

Regarding foreign affairs, the Government made known its determination to pursue a policy of pacification, made possible on the one hand by a program of enmeties and alliances, and on the other by a strong army.

After violent attacks from the representatives of Clerical and Socialist groups, the Chambes voted confidence in the new Government. The vote was 309 to 114.

Enquiry Adjourned.

Toronto, March 7.—That James J. Henderson of 2 Bishop street walked around for a day with a fractured skull, was disclosed in Coroner W. A. Young's inquest in the General Hospital yesterday. Henderson died on Sunday after an operation, and the understanding concerning him was that he had complained to his folks that he had fallen off a street car on Thursday night. On Friday he was up and about and even came down town. Saturday morning he was taken with convulsions and was removed to the hospital. Evidence was taken yesterday from the superintendent, house surgeon, the surgeon who operated upon the man's head and Dr. Mabee, who conducted the post-mortem. It was revealed that the man had a fracture at the base of his skull and there were two large blood clots on his brain. There are no records through the police nor street railway company to show that there was such an accident on the whole system Thursday night.

The enquiry was adjourned until the 14th inst.

Constable Exonerated.

Niagara Falls, Ont., March 7.—Supt. Joseph Rogers has dismissed the charges brought by Bert Coles, liquor dealer, against Provincial Officer John Pay, alleging that Pay exceeded his duty and influenced foreigners to purchase liquor from a brewing company, to the detriment of Coles' business.

This will Stop Your Cough in a Hurry

Save $2 by Making This Cough Syrup at Home.

This recipe makes 16 ounces of better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. A few doses usually conquer the most obstinate cough — stops even whooping cough quickly. Simple as it is, no better remedy can be had at any price.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. It has a pleasant taste and lasts a family a long time. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You can feel this take hold of a cough in a way that means business. Has a good tonic effect, braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, too, which is helpful. A handy remedy for hoarseness, bronchitis, asthma and all throat and lung troubles.

The effect of pine on the membranes is well known. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norwegian white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup recipe has attained great popularity throughout the United States and Canada. It has often been imitated, though never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

CURED OF CONSTIPATION

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in vain to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box. 2

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, March 6.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending March 4 were 1850 cattle, 750 sheep and lambs, 1300 hogs and 300 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 85 cattle, 100 sheep and lambs, 125 hogs and 100 calves.

A dull feeling prevailed in the market for cattle on account of the smaller supplies, and prices show no change as compared with that of last Wednesday. There was a fairly good attendance of buyers, including some from Quebec and Ottawa, but the demand was somewhat limited from local butchers, owing to the Lenten season being now on, which to some extent tends to curtail the consumption of beef and in consequence the trade was rather slow. The demand from Quebec buyers was principally for thin and heavy cows and Ottawa took a couple of car loads of steers. The indications are that, if receipts are larger this day next week, prices will ease off some. Choice steers sold at 6½c, good at 6¼c, fairly good at 5¾c to 6c, fair at 5½c to 5¾c and the lower grades at 5c to 5c per pound. Good to choice cows brought from 4c to 5½c, and the commoner cows from that down to 3½c, while bulls sold at from 4c to 5½c per lb.

Altho the supply of hogs was much smaller than it has been of late, a weaker feeling developed in the market and prices declined 50c per cwt. At this reduction the demand was good from packers and a fairly active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $7.40 to $7.50 per cwt., weighed off cars.

The market for small meats was quiet with no change in prices to note. Owing to the continued cold weather the receipts of calves continue light and in consequence prices rule high with sales of good to choice stock at $7 to $8 each and the lower grades at from $4 to $6 each. A few spring lambs are coming forward, which sold at from $8.50 to $9 each.

Quotations on the market to-day were as follows:

Cattle—Receipts, 2075 head; market active and steady; prime steers, $6.40 to $6.60; shipping steers, $5.75 to $6.25; butcher grades, $5.25 to $6.10; heifers, $4 to $5.75; cows, $3.50 to $5.25; bulls, $4 to $5.50; milch cows and springers, $30 to $65.

Getting Pointers.

Ottawa, March 7.—Admiral Kingsmill and Commander Roper of the Canadian naval service will leave in a few days for Annapolis, Maryland, where they will visit the United States Naval Academy, and acquaint themselves with the system of instruction in vogue in that institution.

Will Not Ask Resignation.

Brandon, March 7.—After three hours' hot discussion the Liberals of Brandon constituency last night endorsed the trade arrangement made by the Government with the United States, but decided not to ask for the resignation of their member, Hon. Clifford Sifton. The Virden delegates and some delegates from the Brandon district held out strongly for his resignation, but the gathering decided to leave it to Mr. Sifton to act upon the matter in the face of the resolution, which was passed on the Government's trade policy.

The Lady Highbrow.

It was a lady highbrow
Conversing on a car.
I heard her mutter: "My, how Common some folks are.
Our sense of cosmos jarring!
They make me weary quite."
I saw her partner sparring
For time or air or light.

And then I heard her gasping,
"With you I quite agree,"
And then in tones most rasping:
"What's cosmos? Pray tell me."
The lady highbrow, preening
Her feathers like a bird,
Said, "I don't know its meaning.
But it's a splendid word."

The Apple.

The apple is not considered to be a complete food in itself, but on the food list it has a value far above the nutriment it possesses. Apples aid the stomach in the digestion of other foods, and therefore the best results are obtained from eating them after rather than before meals.

Trees.

A tree that has been a hundred years growing can be cut down in a couple of hours, but it takes another hundred years to replace it.

Substitute For Cream.

A housekeeper says that a substitute for cream may be made by heating a cup of sweet milk, and when it reaches the boiling point stir into it the yolk of an egg which has been beaten to a cream. When put into the coffee it is said to be of creamy consistency and flavor.

Man and Horse Power.

The working power of an ablebodied man is about one-tenth that of a horse.

Earth Magnetism.

According to Gauss, the magnetic action of the earth is the same as that which would be exerted if in each cubic yard there were eight bar magnets, each weighing one pound.

Scott Was Rated as a Dunce.

As a boy Walter Scott gave few indications of his coming greatness and was described by one of his early preceptors as "the boy that has the thickest skull in the school." Afterward at Edinburgh university the future "wizard" was thus epitomized by one of the leading professors, "Dunce he is, and dunce he will remain."

Peanuts.

Peanuts are very rich in nitrogen and contain considerable starch and oil. When boiled and mashed they are much better than when roasted and ground.

Monkshood.

Among the old herbalists aconite, or monkshood (Aconitum napellus), was held in wholesome terror on account of its poisonous qualities, which are greatly respected even in the present. It is a valued medicine of the pharmacopoeia. Great prejudice formerly existed against its use as a medicine internally.

Insanity.

Perhaps the best definition of insanity is that given by Sir William Hamilton, in which it is declared to be "paralysis of the regulating or legislating faculties of the mind."

Christmas in Geography.

It is rather curious that Christmas is geographically associated with two of the dreariest and most inhospitable spots on the surface of the globe. There is a Christmas sound near Cape Horn, at the antarctic end of America, and there is a Christmas harbor in Kerguelen, the island of desolation, midway between the Cape of Good Hope and Australia. There is a Christmas island in each of three oceans—the Indian, the Atlantic and the Pacific.

UNITED STATES FORCES ARE MOBILIZING

WHAT DO THEY MEAN?

Special Wire to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, MARCH 7.—There was considerable excitement here, when orders were issued by President Taft late last night mobilizing several thousand United States troops along the borders of Mexico. Within five days one quarter of the entire United States army will be within the borders of Texas, and a large proportion of the United States navy will be in the Gulf of Mexico. It was explained this morning that the idea of Taft is to counteract the recent criticisms of the army and navy and show how quickly forces can be gathered together when needed. In other quarters it is stated that it is really a demonstration against Mexico.

COUNCIL ASKED TO MAKE A PLAYGROUND IN WEST END

Petition to This Effect Was Presented at Last Night's Meeting---Mr. J. E. Hodgson Addressed the Council ---The Burnham Property Suggested for the Purpose.

At last night's meeting of the city council a petition was read from a large number of ratepayers in the west end of the city asking that the council take steps to procure a playground in that district suggesting a section of the Burnham property west of Park street and between Charlotte and King streets. Mr. J. E. Hodgson, of the Collegiate Institute staff was present and addressed the Council on behalf of the petitioners, pointing out the wisdom of providing playgrounds for children of tender years, who are cooped up for hours in schools. The value of such playgrounds was becoming more and more appreciated, and he urged upon the council the advisability of taking up the matter at once.

The petition was as follows:

The petition of the undersigned ratepayers of the western part of the city, humbly showeth as follows:

1. That there is no recreation ground for boys and girls between Jackson's Park on the north and the King Edward school on the south, although there are three school districts within the same distance.

2. That available ground for such a purpose is so growing in value as to soon become very expensive.

3. That a stretch of ground centrally located between King and Charlotte streets on the Burnham property is still vacant and suitable for the purpose.

Your petitioners therefore, pray that Lot sixty-eight to eighty-seven, Plan 119, Peterborough, be purchased and such improvements be made thereon as are necessary to make same suitable for recreation purposes.

The matter was referred to the Manufacturers and Parks committee.

CHINESE LAUNDRYMAN IS ASSAULTED WITH AN AXE

Young Englishman Borrows Weapon and Attempts Robbery---Victim Hurled Weapon at Assailant As He Ran Away and the Police Hope Wound Will Lead To His Arrest.

Special wire to The Examiner:

TORONTO, MARCH 7.—Members of the police department spent all last evening searching for a man who murderously assaulted Yip Tuck in the Chinese laundry of Charlie Lee at 209 Elizabeth street yesterday afternoon. The assailant is described as an Englishman, about 23 years of age, wearing a grey suit and cap. He had no overcoat. Yip Tuck was not seriously injured. He received two slight gashes in the back of the head with a lather's axe wielded by the young man who made an unsuccessful attempt to overpower and rob him. The Chinaman put up a sturdy fight, and succeeded in wounding his assailant as the latter was fleeing from the place.

Shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday the would-be robber approached a workman on the General Hospital site on College street and asked him for the loan of a crowbar, saying: "I want to pull off a job in a Chinese laundry. If you can accommodate me get busy and find something, because my time is limited and I have to be on the job as speedily as possible."

The workman had him driven from the place. Then the man went to another part of the grounds, where he made a similar request of a boy who was acting as a helper. When the lad told him he did not have a crowbar the man said he would be satisfied with an axe of any kind for a few minutes to nail up a doorway. He was accommodated.

Found Chinaman Alone.

Upon entering the laundry he found Yip Tuck alone, assorting laundry.

"Are you alone?" asked the man.

"Yes," answered the Chinaman.

"Where do you keep your money?" was the second question put to the Celestial, who became suspicious and began to move towards the washing room. Before the Chinaman had a chance to answer, however, his assailant leaped over the counter, and pulling the axe from under his coat struck him over the head, inflicting a gash about four inches long. The blow was not sufficient, however, to daze the Celestial, who after receiving a second blow, made a rush at his assailant. Unable to overpower his victim, the would-be robber dropped the axe and made for the front door, closely followed by the Chinaman, who had picked up the axe. Chinaman and assailant struggled at the door, and when the man broke away the Celestial hurled the axe after him. The blade apparently took effect in the neck, as blood stains were afterwards traced on the sidewalk for a considerable distance.

Yip Tuck was taken to the Nurses' Home on Hayter street, where his wounds were dressed. Detectives Montgomery, Wallace and Newton are working on the case and hope to locate the man by means of the wound. The axe is in the custody of the authorities.

OPENING SERVICES OF KNOX CHURCH MISSION

Rev. Mr. Woodside Made a Most Favourable Impression Upon a Large Congregation Last Night.

A STIRRING MESSAGE

A fairly large congregation turned out last night to hear a second of the series of twelve special evangelistic services, which are being given in Knox church.

The meeting opened with a special song service conducted by Mr. McBrethey, a soloist of well known repute. It is evident that Mr. McBrethey is well gifted with the ability to infuse into an audience that spirit of song or soul inspiration. He has a sweet, clear voice with a remarkable range, coupled with a wonderful gift of expression. These song services, apart from anything else, should prove of sufficient inducement to ensure a full house each and every night.

The chief speaker during this evangelistic campaign will be the Rev. G. A. Woodside, of Owen Sound. Rev. Mr. Woodside has become prominent in the evangelistic field, and it is not hard to predict success for this campaign with two such prominent men as Mr. McBrethey and the Rev. Mr. Woodside.

In his opening remarks, the speaker drew attention to the fact that he had not come before them with a new message, but to emphasize the need of adhering strictly to the old message that had already been given many, many years ago. The text for the evening was from John, the first chapter and 42nd verse. "And He Brought Him to Jesus."

The purpose of this evangelistic campaign, said Rev. Mr. Woodside was to awaken the sense of the people's responsibility towards God. I was informed on the train coming down from Montreal to Peterborough that "Peterborough was a city of churches. But let me tell you that fine and imposing edifices are not an essential thing towards the promotion of Christianity.

The man who is too tired to go to church on Sunday and sits at home and enjoys his pipe and newspaper and demands that his children go to Sunday school in the afternoon while he himself discusses the reciprocity question or some other subject of importance to the business world, does more to injure the church to-day than those who are addicted to vice and sin. We are held responsible for our fellow being. There are men in Peterborough to-night who will pass into eternity unsaved and we shall have to face a charge of having defrauded God of his own, on the judgment day if we do not go out and save them.

DRUNKS IN POLICE COURT TO-DAY

A local young man, who appeared in the police court a few weeks ago, on a charge of drunk and disorderly, appeared again this morning on the same charge. He pleaded guilty. The magistrate explained that the law would force him to tell where he got his liquor, but he would not tell so was remanded for a week.

Wm. Armstrong, a Havelock man was fined $5.00 or ten days for being drunk and disorderly in a public place yesterday. Armstrong was in court last week on the same charge and had a $2.00 fine unpaid. He was unable to pay the fine of $5.00 this morning, so was sent up to the jail for ten days.

Thos. Graystock was charged with non-payment of his poll tax. He thought he had no right to pay it. The magistrate asked him how old he was and he was unable to state. He thought that he was over 50, but could not say how much. "Fifty-one and a half," suggested the magistrate but Graystock could not say. He was convinced, however, that he had to pay the tax, and accordingly paid over the dollar, at the same time stating that he wanted his name on the voters' list.

CANON DAVIDSON'S ADDRESS IN THE TORONTO MISSION

The Toronto Globe says:

"It is far and away the best mission ever held in Toronto, people are crowding to hear the speakers, and it is certain that good results will follow." This opinion was expressed yesterday by Bishop H. D. Reeve, who himself preached to crowded audiences on Sunday in St. Olivet church.

The congregations last night were even larger than those of Friday, church after church having its full seating capacity occupied.

At St. Cyprian's an informal and evengelical service was held. Canon Davidson's audience including many from the non-conformist chapels. There were present Rev. J. Macklem of Trinity; Rev. A. B. Winchester of Knox Presbyterian; Rev. H. R. Noble of Christie St. Baptist church, and a deputation of Trinity students.

Need of the Country.

Canon Davidson spoke on national and religious fellowship. "One of the great needs of our country," he said, "Is that of fellowship. We have to combat racial difficulties at the present time and there is an ever present desire on the part of the citizens to live in isolated communities and sections, which all tend to destroy that solidarity and acceptiveness which would make us a great world power.

"In the country this is not so noticeable as in the city, and I would suggest that we might display more friendly feeling on public occasions for by small things life is made or marred, civic or individual."

In conclusion, the Canon described the possibilities of the country and the service concluded with the singing of "Oh, Canada."

READ THE AD.

The sale commenced by Mr. N. Sukloff, 166 Simcoe street, has proved a phenomenal success in every way, and the result has been a long line of satisfied customers to Mr. Sukloff's credit. The new store has started out at a clip that gives promise of a highly successful business as the stock is up-to-date and complete. Those who appreciate genuine bargains are advised to read Mr. Sukloff's big advertisement in to-morrow's Examiner, which will contain some attractive offers that will make you hold your breath.

TOUR OF VESTA VICTORIA HAS BEEN GREAT SUCCESS

Colonel Wm. A. Thompson, the well-known Australian theatrical magnate, will bring the celebrated English comedienne, Vesta Victoria, to this city. Miss Victoria's name is a household world in the United States, Australia and Great Britain, but this is her first appearance in Canada. Her tour of the Dominion is the result of thousands of requests on the part of Canadians. From its inception every engagement has been a successful one, packed houses greeting the little English singer everywhere. Her songs are all wonderfully clever, and as it is generally conceded that no other woman can sing a comic song like Miss Victoria, it is very evident that her entertainment is of a delightful nature.

AN ANNIVERSARY

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Jackson, 318 Charlotte street, was last evening the scene of a very happy event when they celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. The occasion was honoured by about thirty of their most immediate friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Jackson received their guests in a very cordial manner, assisted by Mrs. F. H. Falkner, and Mrs. J. W. Bryans, of Havelock, and the Misses Flo and Mary Eason, city. They were the recipients of many beautiful and costly presents, suitable for the occasion, which evidenced the high esteem in which they are held by their many friends. Including the presents was a piece of silver from Mrs. Jackson's mother, Mrs. Spalsbury that has been in the family over a hundred years, it being a part of a set used in the late Captain F. B. Spilsbury's family of Colborne, Ont. During the evening games of different kinds were indulged in. Miss Greta LeBerr rendered two recitations which added to the enjoyment of the evening.

A sumptuous and dainty repast provided by the hostess was served and a most sociable and enjoyable time in general was indulged in. The assembly dispersed about midnight, after wishing Mr. and Mrs. Jackson many happy returns.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE GODDESS OF LIBERTY.

"The Goddess of Liberty," which appeared at the Grand Opera House last night under Mort. H. Singer's auspices, proved a real musical comedy and one of the brightest, most up-to-the-minute and snappiest "fun-shows" local play-goers have been favoured with in a long time. Certainly no more melodious score has been heard at the Grand in many months; it is Joe Howard at his best. The versatile composer seems to have a special faculty for writing haunting little melodies that get over the footlights and are carried away from the theatre to be whistled everywhere and "The Goddess of Liberty" score is as good as anything he has done. He has added to its excellence too by interpolating the hits of two of his other musical comedies. "What's the Use of Dreaming" from "The Time, The Place and the Girl" and "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" from "The Prince of To-night." Every song number went big and the audience was insistent in its demand for encores, especially as both principals and chorus possessed voices away above the average and made the most of the music.

The plot is of the usual gauzy thinness, peculiar to musical productions but Messrs. Hough and Adams have managed to work out a lot of amusing situations and the lines are bright and clever while the comedy gets away from hackneyed effects.

"The Goddess of Liberty," however, was more than a show for the ears, the eyes had a chance as well. The chorus was comely and sprightly, the costumes gorgeous in the extreme and the scenic effects surprisingly lavish. No more realistic illusion has been staged here than the thunder, lightning and rain storm in the second act which was so perfect that the storm of rain was echoed by a storm of applause from the audience.

No prima donna has been heard here this season who has sung more charmingly or been more pleasing in her general work than Miss Violet Seaton who possesses a powerful, beautifully controlled and pure soprano and sings with a refreshing expression. Her number "If All Moon-Were Honeymoons" was one of the big hits and "Here's to the Last Girl" was not far behind the moon song in popularity. Robert H. Wilson in the principal male part revealed a powerful tenor voice and clever acting ability. To him fell the two numbers from Howard's earlier musical comedies and Peterborough people have heard neither of them better sung. Johnny Fogerty as "Bill the Barkeep" and Ike Oliver as "the tailor" were two very funny comedians whose work was responsible for much of the laughter. As waiters in the pantomime dinner in the last act when they poured coffee down the necks of imaginary guests, their work was immense. The chorus girls made a hit in the number "Oskee Wow-Wow," in which twenty of them engaged in half as many boxing bouts. A blonde and brunette who occupied the centre of the stage mixed it vigorously and half a dozen encores were demanded.

Peterborough was very fortunate in getting an opportunity of seeing "The Goddess of Liberty," from start to finish a most entertaining production.

OTTAWA, MARCH 7.—The Opposition has decided not to place any obstacle in the way of Premier Laurier speaking to-day on the reciprocity bill and he will accordingly proceed immediately after three o'clock. His utterances are eagerly awaited, not only as a reply to Conservatives, but also to Sifton, German and other Liberals, who are apparently wavering.

500 TICKETS

Only a Limited Number of Seats for the McNeil Lecture

The number of tickets for sale for the lecture by Rev. John MacNeill on "The Making of a Nation," will be only five hundred, on account of the limited capacity of the Murray Street church, where the lecture is to be delivered. The date is Tuesday, March 21st, and the tickets are selling rapidly. This lecture was listened to by an audience of twelve thousand people in the Royal Albert Hall, London, England, in 1905, and wherever it has been delivered it has delighted the audience.

Mr. McNeill is a man of no ordinary ability and his popular presentation of the future of Canada is bound to attract a large audience of Peterborough people. This will be the first time he has come to Peterborough ot lecture.

FEMININE HEADGEAR AND ST. PATRICK'S DAY

One can hardly see the relation between St. Patrick's Day and Millinery, except as indicated by the advance of spring weather. But the merchants of Peterborough have given St. Patrick's Day a special millinery meaning. All the merchants have decided to hold their annual millinery openings on Friday and Saturday, March 17th and 18th.

This will be the first time in history that the flag that's braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze, will be run aloft to celebrate millinery openings. Orders have been issued that the flag shall be displayed on all government buildings, on all national holidays, including, of course, St. Patrick's Day.

Whether or not St. Patrick would consider this a compliment is a question. If he could come back to earth and see the modern millinery monstrosities that pass for hats, would he be proud to have his birthday associated with them? But then, the modern hat is the fashion and of course it goes.

Everybody will be interested in the 17th and 18th of March; women because it will inaugurate the season dear to their dear hearts, and the men, because they will be curious to know what form of headgear, what style of roof on rats, the next millinery epidemic will bring forth.

CANADA'S MINERAL WEALTH.

Last year the mineral output of Canada, according to a preliminary report of the Dominion Department of Mines, amounted to considerably more than one hundred million dollars—$105,068,426. This is a large amount of money, but it falls considerably below this year's total of Dominion revenue, which is expected to reach one hundred and seventeen million dollars. The increase in the mineral output of Canada is thirteen and a quarter millions over the figures of last year. Two-thirds of the money returns from minerals comes from the province of Ontario with forty-three millions. British Columbia is next with twenty-four and a half millions, and Nova Scotia shows a total of fourteen millions, the latter due chiefly to the extent of her coal and iron production. Coal scores the highest in the matter of output, with nearly thirty millions. Silver is a fair second with seventeen millions and in order, neck and neck, pig iron and nickel come in with eleven millions each. Gold totals ten millions and cement six millions. In Nova Scotia there was a largely increased production of coal and gypsum. In Quebec the principal increases were in cement and asbestos. Ontario's increases are principally in the metals, copper, nickel and silver. Manitoba shows an increased production of gypsum and clay products; while in Alberta clay products, cement, and particularly coal, contribute the chief gains. In British Columbia the increase is mainly due to the coal industry, while the Yukon not only shows a gratifying gain in gold production but a growing shipment of copper and silver ores.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

If reciprocity means annexation—if it was fiendishly designed to that end by our Yankee neighbours, how is it that the United States Senators should show such deadly hostility to it, and killed it, as far as it was in their power to do so?

Ottawa boasts of having the finest Collegiate Institute in the Dominion. But what will this avail in later years, if it still maintains the highest rate of infant mortality, as Dr. Black, of Hants, declared in the House of Commons, when referring to Ottawa's water supply as being possibly the worst in the Dominion? In default of improvement in the two latter respects, where will the future supply of pupils from the best Collegiate Institute come from?

ANOTHER FARMER TESTIFIES.

(Toronto Star.)

The first prize farm in Durham County in 1909 was that of Mr. W. G. Smith, of Enfield, and the gold cup which he received as a trophy bears testimony to his progressiveness as an agriculturist. Mr. Smith sends to The Star an unsolicited testimony as to the benefits of reciprocal trade, which is in accord with the many expressions of approval which have been secured from farmers in different sections of Ontario. Mr. Smith notes that he has often heard his father speak of "the days when he drew barley to Oshawa harbour for 80 cents a bushel and more. Those were the days when grain brought big money. When the heavy duty was put on barley, it was a blow to the farmer, and I remember one year, about 1895 or '6, when barley sold as low as 27 cents a bushel, and everything, in the last years of the Government of that day, seemed to be at a standstill." This correspondent deals in a rather interesting way with the annexation cry, in which he, like most farmers, "can see no force whatever." He puts the case as follows:

"The leader of the Opposition and many of his followers live in a city or town, and, as a rule, people in the city or town don't know the people in the next house to them, who should be their neighbours, and so they want Canada and the United States to live the same way. We, as farmers, know our neighbours and appreciate each other by dealing and trading, and we do not lose any family honour by doing so. We believe that it is right and proper that Canada and the United States should know each other as neighbours, and by so doing the British Empire will not be weakened, but rather made stronger."

This fairly represents the estimate of the disloyal argument in rural communities. The farmer declines to believe that if he trades freely with his neighbour he is taking a first step towards acquiring the neighbour's farm.

There is another aspect of the present situation as to which the sentiments of Mr. Smith may be deemed thoroughly representative of agricultural opinion. "If we could only form a union and stand by it," he says, "we could make all other lines tremble. However, the day has dawned when we know our rights and shall continue to demand them." Statements similar to this one are being made daily in rural districts. The farmer feels that a trade agreement which would be directly beneficial to himself, and indirectly beneficial to the country at large, is being opposed by organized forces. He realizes that agricultural interests must also organize if they are to be made an effective fighting force. To-day the farmers of Canada are not talking of making themselves heard through the vehicle of a third party, but of exerting their united influence within the existing parties. When the agricultural population decides to subordinate politics to business, there will be a new and effective force in Canadian public life which other elements and organizations will find it unwise to disregard.

SPRING AND SPORT.

In these days of dreary tariff talk it is pleasant to read something poetical appealing and timely, like the following, from the London Advertiser:

Spring is marching northwards. Having celebrated the Mardi Gras as a farewell to southern flesh-pots, this General of Joy broke camp on Ash Wednesday, lifted its banners of life and love, started on the 40 days' march for winter's capital in the far north. The enemy has strong outposts and makes so hard a fight that spring must more than once retreat and even run for it.

But his armies, the myriad spirits that "on the bat's back do fly," that hold carer on bird or insect crying and buzzing in countless chorus, all keep coming on. Each advance is stronger. He carries the sun before him as a burning shield, which the frost may not look upon and live.

Not all are pleased at the conqueror's fitful advance. The splendid winter games, the skating, hockey, and curling, must be laid aside, and a time of Lenten dullness will prevail between seasons, while spring and winter fight it out. The close of the hockey contest is usually unsatisfactory, through thaws and slush, just as the final baseball championship in October is decided amidst frost or even snow. Then comes that marked suspension of outdoor athletics for a time, such as the fall does not suffer from.

The little girl, it is true, takes to her skipping rope as soon as the walks are clear; and the small boys with barbaric tenacity of old tradition begin the serious game of marbles in the icy mud. This game is part of the boy's ritual calendar; there is a sort of sanctity in the regularity of its observance; it is a movable feast, though not very movable, depending on the duration of deep snow. When and how did this rite originate? Antiquity is implied in its etiquette, terminology and code, in the grave importance with which its days are solemnized each year. An oldster musing respectfully over a game in progress feels awed as by some ancestral whisper. He is in the presence of a primal mystery, well associated with the spring of the year. The child is father of the man; he is also the far-off ancestor when he plays at this earnest, prehistoric pastime.

But the Lenten period is tedious to the older athlete and sportsman. Quoits will hardly do. He longs for the time

When that Aprille with his showers swoote
The drought of March hath pierced to the root

Easter come, he will go on Saturday pilgrimages to favourite streams and ponds, bent on reviving his skill in the gentle art of Walton, that first and last of summer sports. Then all the world rejoices, the flowers rush out between sun and shower. Our Lady of the Sunshine forgetting her snows makes ready her May crown, and the lacrosse or baseball player brings tender fingers into the eager air.

RELATION OF UNIONIST LEADER TO THE LIBERAL TRIUMPH

(Toronto Globe)

The second reading debate on the veto bill in the British Commons, and the admission by Mr. Balfour that the Lords must be the servants, not the masters, of the nation, disposes of the argument that the Lords should be permitted to reform themselves. It also brings into bold relief the lack of cohesion in the Unionist ranks, which has been freely attributed to the declining influence of Mr. Balfour as the leader of the party. Is Mr. Balfour wholly responsible for the disunion and weakness of the Opposition?

Lord Curzon recently described Mr. Balfour as the greatest leader since the days of Pitt. Other admirers have referred to him as a supremely able leader of a supremely stupid party. But, despite his high intllectual gifts, we doubt if the tributes of these friends to his qualities as a leader have been justified by results.

When Mr. Balfour took over the leadership from the late Lord Salisbury in 1902 the Unionist party had a majority in the Commons of 134 over all parties, and presented a united front in the country. The personnel of the Cabinet—men like the late Duke of Devonshire, Lord James of Hereford, and Mr. Goschen—inspired confidence. There was no poverty of intellect or of statesmanship on the Unionist front benches. Mr. Balfour brought to the office of Prime Minister not only personal qualities that marked him for leadership, but a record of successful administration as a Minister of the Crown, combined with powers of debate as leader of his party in the Commons, that presaged a long and prosperous term of office. And yet, with the brightest prospects before him, he has led his party from disaster to disaster.

Various reasons have been assigned for the repeated defeats that have overwhelmed the Unionist party at the polls. For the second time during the past five years the party organization is being remodelled, but the fault does not lie in the party machinery. Nor is it altogether fair to attribute the debacle of 1906 and after to the Opposition leader. Unlike Lord Salisbury, Mr. Balfour has not had a free hand. Since he assumed office in 1902 misfortune after misfortune has dogged his footsteps. At a most critical period in the fortunes of the party his Cabinet was rent in twain by the tariff reform policy of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain. That was the moment when a strong leader would have rejected the Chamberlain policy, but Mr. Balfour elected to face the rising tide of Liberalism in 1905-6 with a Cabinet of unknown and untried men, whose incapacity excited ridicule in Parliament and completed his downfall in the constituencies.

Mr. Chamberlain has been the evil genius of Unionism, as he was of Liberalism in 1886. With all the zeal of the convert he has been more Tory than Mr. Balfour in support of the Union and of the House of Lords, and yet no man has done more to force these two questions to a final decision by the people. The Lloyd-George Budget was the reply of free traders to the demand for tariff reform, and out of this controversy emerged the veto bill, now before Parliament, and the proposed Irish Home Rule bill, already in the hands of the draughtsman.

But the failure of Mr. Balfour cannot be wholly ascribed to negative causes. He has failed to win support in the country because the people asked for bread and he offered them a stone. Unionism, so long as it was tempered by the Liberalism of the Devonshires, Jameses, and Goschens, was capable of satisfying in some measure the wants of the country. But Unionism, dominated by Torvism, plus tariff reform, was predestined to failure in a land where labour was becoming articulate and democracy conscious of its powers. The triumph of Liberalism in 1906 was no mere party triumph. It was a national uprising.

ANTI-RECIPROCITY CROWD TO MAKE A COMPLETE CENSUS

Have Started to Canvass Montreal, and Will Soon Cover All of Canada—Will Publish the Names—Secret Campaigners Have Evidently Strong Financial Backing

(Toronto Star)

MONTREAL, MARCH 6.—Active work began this morning by a score or more of amateur canvassers, who have undertaken to persuade the people of Montreal that the reciprocity agreement, now under consideration in Ottawa and Washington, is against the best interests of the country. These men are working for the newly-formed Anti-Reciprocity League. By the end of the week it is expected that a canvas of Toronto, Ottawa, Quebec, and several of the larger towns in the east of Canada will have been commenced, and within a short time, according to the plans of the organizers of the league, every city and town in Canada will have an organization similar to the one now at work in Montreal, with the object of obtaining signatures of citizens against the agreement.

The league was formed two weeks ago at a secret meeting, held in the Montreal Board of Trade. Its inception was the result of correspondence between a number of large manufacturers and prominent Conservative politicat workers in Montreal and Toronto. The formation of the league was kept a profound secret even from opponents of reciprocity, the few men who undertook to put the scheme through planning out all the details before letting any of the others on "the inside." Even now those who are really behind the movement are keeping in the background, and their names are not known. The league has a office in the Beardmore building here, but those who are busy there enrolling canvassers and organizing the details of the campaign are merely underlings, hired to perform the duties assigned to them.

Premature Publication.

It was the original intention of the organizers to keep the affair a secret until the Toronto office was opened, and everything in readiness to begin the canvas for signatures in the Queen City as well as in Montreal. Unfortunately, through the zeal of one of the younger workers, the plans of the league became known to a correspondent of The Toronto Star on Friday last, the day on which the Montreal office was opened. The premature publications of their plans was a surprise to the organizers. They hastened to issue an explantion of the objects and purposes of the league, which was published in all the local anti-reciprocity papers on Saturday.

Now that the cat has been let out of the bag, however, the league workers are trying to push the campaign forward as rapidly as possible. They secured a number of voluntary canvassers on Saturday, and this morning a number of these started to work

The Two Lists.

These canvassers carry two lists. One in the form of a petition to the House of Commons and the Senate, and it is that one which they are to endeavour in every possible way to cozen the voters into signing. The other merely states at the top "I am in favour of the proposed reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States." Failing to obtain the signatures of his victim to the regular petition against the treaty the canvasser is instructed to have him sign the other.

These private instructions to canvassers make rather interesting reading. They were not intended for publication, but a Toronto Star correspondent succeeded in obtaining a copy. The clause which deals with the pro-reciprocity list is evidently of no little importance, for it is printed in red ink in capital letters. It reads:

"In case you meet with any hesitation on the part of persons favouring reciprocity, to sign the list prepared for that purpose, explain that we wish for a complete census, as we intend to publish the names of our canvass."

Some Instructions.

Among the other instructions to the signature-collectors are:

"To obtain the results sought for it is essential that the work shall be done thoroughly. Every building in the city in which people live or work must be visited.

"Only those who are citizens of Canada, men, 21 years old, shall be eligible to sign the petition to have their names entered on the lists.

"When calling at a residence, if the head of the house is not at home, ask for the grown-up son, or men servants.

"Whenever anyone is met with who is enthusiastically opposed to reciprocity ask him to sign the roll of the Anti-Reciprocity League. There are no fees of any kind."

The petition to the House of Commons, which the voters are asked to sign—provided they do not prefer the other list with the shorter introduction, is a lengthy one and contains all the arguments which have been advanced against reciprocity, particular attention being paid to the annexation cry.

Manufacturers Busy.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association officials are working earnestly against the proposed reciprocity agreement. They want it done very quietly, however. Therefore, a circular, dealing with various matters, was issued last week, and on one side is the proposal of the officials of the association. Nearly one-half of the sheet is taken up with the warning that this matter is "private to members," and "confidential." The other part of the page contains the following:

"There are still a large number of members who have not applied for copies of the pamphlet, containing the memorial defining the association's position on reciprocity and tariff question generally, which was presented to the Government at Ottawa on January 13. The tariff committee are anxious to have this pamphlet distributed as widely as possible, and ask the co-operation of members in placing it in the hands of their employees. It can also be distributed to advantage to customers of the different members, particularly in the West. If you have not already secured a supply, write to the secretary, stating how many you require at once and they will be sent to you free of charge. Printed in both French and English."

"This appears to disclose a sad state of affairs, indeed," remarked a prominent member of the association this morning. "There are still a large number of members who have not applied for the pamphlet,' evidently means that, like myself, very few of the members are interested in the pamphlet. No wonder it is marked 'confidential.'"

To-night at 9 o'clock the Examiner Benedicts and Bachelors will meet at Brock street rink in what promises to be the greatest battle ever fought on ice. Excitement is at fever heat over the approaching contest and the betting is the highest on record. Some one has opened a book and the prices are something like this:

50 to 1 that the Benedicts do not win by 5 goals.

25 to 1 that the Benedicts do not win at all.

1 to 2 that the Bachelors win by 15.

500 to 1 that Mylund doesn't score three goals.

5 to 6 that Dillon has at least thirty-two falls.

Even money that Canniff will stop one shot.

Even money that Sharrard can go from one end to the other without tripping over himself.

2 to 1 that Canniff doesn't wear skates.

Mr. Chas. Curtis, the genial Review player will endeavour to referee and will start the gladiators away sharp at the advertised time. Players and their valets are notified that they must be on hand early in order to dress for the game.

Frontenacs Champions For The Second Year Beat Orillia Easily

KINGSTON, MARCH 6.—Frontenacs of Kingston again won the coveted junior O. H. A. silverware here to-night in the final game with Orillia, defeating them by the one-sided score of 16 to 5, after one of the finest games seen here in years. The score at half-time was 8 to 1. The game was seen by 2,000 people, who crowded every inch of room in the rink and a number of them stood in line for four hours waiting to get in.

For the first five minutes of play indications were that it might be a very close game, as the teams were evenly matched. Back and forth from one end of the rink to the other went the puck, brilliant rushes, stiff checking and a great deal of backchecking on both sides characterized the play. All at once Frontenacs broke away and scored three goals before their opponents had time to realize it. Millan, the crack winger man, scored the first and figured in all three. The next one Brouse obtained on an individual rush the entire length of the rink. Ernie Jupp nailed the first one for Orillia on a pass from Thornton. McCammon, the husky defence man of Kingston scored immediately after on an individual rush. Millan and Boyer scored on a pass out from behind goal and Davidson followed with an individual rush the whole length of the ice.

Here was what Frontenacs desired, and from then to the end of the game they ran away with it. When they came on the ice in the second half they played stronger than ever. Towards the end of the first half Ern. Jupp, the crack centre, was injured by being hit in the face by Hunter's stick and was off for the rest of the game. Boyer went off to even up.

The last half was equally as good an exhibition of the game as the first and the contest all through was very clean. Millan figured most in the scoring line, being responsible one way and another for eight of the sixteen goals. His work was brilliant, he being one of the foremost figures on the ice. Davidson, captain of the team, astonished the crowd as usual with his effective rushes. One score he made was as nice a piece of follow-up work as was ever seen. He shot from centre and scored on the rebound. Brouse was in great shape, while McCammon, on the defence played the game of his life. He outskated any member of the Orillia team. Williams, in the nets, was never seen to better advantage, and his work was sensational. Hunt, in centre, showed the visitors some stick handling. Boyer worked well while he was on, but only played a short time.

Orillia have a great team, but they are young and once they lost their heads they never regained them. "Lovey" Jupp and Thornton, on the wings, played a great combination game, but could not get past the defence. Butterfield played as the supporters here never saw an opponent play before. Cooke, at point, had some tactics up his sleeve which won the admiration of the crowd. Corbould in goal, played a game equal to Williams' and was a star. His stopping was brilliant. McNabb, at cover, is a whirlwind and is a pretty stick handler. All the forward line check back well. The line-up:

Referee, Ed. Wettlaufer, Berlin.

SURPRISE FOR HARVEY SPROULE'S ALL STARS

This has been a year of hockey surprises and there is a great big one coming to Harvey Sproule when he brings his All Star senior O.H.A. team to Peterborough to-morrow night. Harvey has collected a formidable bunch all right, but if he expects that the Petes are going to be easy money for his selects he has another guess coming and a mighty large one, too. Sproule hasn't had much of a line on the intermediates, as the only time he saw the Petes in action was in that disastrous game in Belleville when the team was only half strength. It will be a real game of hockey all the way and will afford an opportunity of settling the question whether or not the good intermediates are as fast or faster than the seniors. All the intermediate teams in the O. H. A. class claim this fact, while the seniors of course see nothing but their own division. To-morrow night will see one of the strongest compilation of seniors gotten together this year. The game will start at 8.30, and will be witnessed by a large crowd.

VESTA VICTORIA

LONDON'S FAVORITE"

CELEBRATED ENGLISH SINGER SAYS TO STAGE STRUCK GIRLS—"BE SURE YOU HAVE TALENT, THEN GO AHEAD"

Miss Vesta Victoria, the celebrated English singing comedienne, now touring Canada with her company of international players has some decided views on the stage as a means of livelihood for girls.

"The glamor of the footlights," said Miss Victoria, in an interview, "has a wonderful fascination to the young mind. It all looks so bright and so gay. The cares of the world seem for the time being to be put behind and out of mind and this great fairyland appears to beckon the youth onward with ever-growing promise. The stage seems to offer a ready solution for every ailment, except possibly homesickness. Whether the malady be of the mind or physical does not seem to matter. We hear remarkable tales of actors and actresses being taken out of a sick bed and carried to the theatre. We hear of them being lifted fearfully to the wings and pushed on the stage. Then we are told that the buoyant effect of being before an audience acts as a stimulus and they go through their parts perfectly and collapse as they leave the stage.

"Bosh! tommy-rot. The stage is one of the hardest ways to make a living and I sincerely hope none of my young friends will be blinded by the so-called stars they see. There are a very few successful artists, but even these go through the saddest of experiences before and with increasing hard work as the years progress.

"My answer to a stage struck girl is to confine herself to amateur theatricals which are useful in exercising the mind, body and voice. Histrionic talent will assert itself if a person has it, and it can always be detected very early. If a girl has such talent she is very right in going on the stage, although she cannot realize the heartaches and disappointments that are in store for her even then. But if she has little or no talent she should shun the footlights like the plague, because such a career spells suffering with no chance for success.

"Stage business is different from any other business. If a girl is a stenographer, she knows practically what she will be asked to do at her place of business. She knows when she must get up, what she will have to eat, how to get to her office, and when she gets through she knows where she is going. In other words, she has a home and she leads a regular life. In the theatrical profession this is all changed. In cases where a girl is a member of a traveling organization that is appearing in the smaller towns, she has a different hotel every night, or even is often forced to sleep on trains in draughty sleeping cars. She endures all kinds of hardships in bad cookery and irregularity of meals. She is footsome, she longs for home, no matter how much she once wanted to leave it, and in a word she is the personification of misery. Add to all this that he is often underpaid and you have the sum total of unhappiness.

"This state of affairs goes on with no advancement for many years oftentimes. Even in the case of a woman who has talent she is often past the thirty mark before her ability is recognized. Of course there are exceptions to the rule. Sometimes an understudy leaps into a part through the misdisposition of the star and demonstrates at one performance that she has unusual talent. All this is, of course, providing a dramatic or musical comedy career is under discussion.

"In the case of a singer, either lyceum or stage worker, the result is arrived at much more readily. Any manager will tell an applicant whether her voice is suited to the stage, but of course he cannot quickly tell if she possesses the magnetism that singers invariably require to make them successful. This point can only be determined by watching several performances in public and seeing the effect of the singer on the audiences.

"I suppose I have not suffered from the hardships of a theatrical life, because I never had any other to compare it to. I made my first appearance before the footlights when I was four years of age, and since then have played unceasingly. My mother and father were both engaged in theatricals and so I fell into it naturally. So I think I am well able to tell of the difficulties of the business and to warn young girls of its severe discomforts. But I repeat that, with talent, the stage holds out glorious promise to a girl. She can make tons of money and get universal admiration as a star in theatricals, two ends that she could possibly not attain in any other business."

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I HAVE a story in three chapters to tell you to-day.

CHAPTER I.

Eleanor and Katherine had been chums from primary school days.

All through grammar school and high school they had walked to and from school together and had done their lessons, to-day at Eleanor's home, to-morrow at Katherine's. Two chums of the opposite sex had obligingly become enamoured of the twain and had "beaued" them to most of the high school parties in cozy foursomes.

Then Eleanor went to college and Katherine stayed at home, but if anyone thought that would break up the friendship he was much mistaken. The two girls corresponded as regularly as plighted lovers all through the school year, and the first day of vacation found them linked arm in arm, and thus they remained all summer.

Then Eleanor graduated and came home to live, and the following June Katherine and Eleanor crowned the Damon and Pythias act by announcing their engagements on the same day.

The fiances, although not the two high school swains were obliging enough to be very good friends, so the foursome continued through the engagement.

Katherine was married in September, Eleanor in November, Katherine and her husband boarded the first few months until Eleanor had returned from her honeymoon. Then, as neither of the grooms was overloaded with the world's goods, no one was much startled when the word went about that the four were going to housekeeping together in a much nicer house than either couple could have afforded alone.

CHAPTER II.

I'm not going to write this chapter. You see, I don't really know much about it. So I'm going to leave you to infer it, as I do, from what I know is apt to happen when any two families, however congenial, attempt to live together.

CHAPTER III.

The third chapter is simply that Eleanor and Katherine now live at opposite ends of the town and are barely "speech-friends."

Do you think that any two families, however congenial, can live together and have as much peace and harmony in the home as if each had an impregnable castle of its own?

I don't,

The families may be closely linked by relationship—they may consist of father and mother and married daughter's family—or of two married sisters, or of a son and wife and his father and mother, and they may be the most congenial and affectionate people in the world, but the moment you put two heads of a house in one house you set a trouble germ to work.

There may never be any open friction, but I don't believe there will ever be the completehappiness and home satisfaction and harmony around that hearth that there is about the hearth where the housemates are all members of one family.

I don't even believe it is good policy for two related or very intimate families to live in two apartments in the same house.

Now that may sound overstated, but it is the testimony of many, many people whose wisdom is not of theory, but of experience.

Perhaps you think that all this is overstated—you who are contemplating some similar move—doubtless you think YOU can get along with people whom you love. All this may be true as a rule, you say, but YOUR case is different, YOU and YOUR friends are peculiarly congenial.

Maybe so, maybe so—but, please remember, my friends—"that's what they all say"

THE COUNCIL HELD A VERY BRIEF SESSION

By-law Was Passed Confirming Increase in Salaries of the Firemen—Fire Protection for the Auburn Mills.

OTHER BUSINESS

The City Council's session last night at the regular monthly meeting came near setting a record for quickness and dispatch, the slate being wiped clean in exactly one hour and the Council adjourned at 9 o'clock. The docket was a light one, consisting of little besides routine business. Two deputations addressed the Council, a number of communications was received and dealt with, reports heard and a number of by-laws passed.

Mayor Morrow presided and all the members of the Council were present, except Ald. Bradburn, who is absent from the city.

The following communications were received.

From the Auditor, Sheriff Hall, giving the following report:

Gentlemen,—I have the honour to submit herewith my report, as auditor of the accounts of the city for the year ending 31st of December, 1910:

I have examined the books of accounts and vouchers of the City Clerk the City Treasurer, the Treasurer of the Commissioners of the City Trust, the Treasurer of the Water Commissioners, the Treasurer of the Board of Education, the Treasurer of the Nicholls Hospital Trust, and of the Central Charity Board, the Assessment and Collectors' rolls of 1909 and 1910, and the arrears of taxes account.

I have much pleasure in reporting that the books of all of these departments are well and accurately kept.

The bonds of the various officials of the Corporation are in proper form and for the required amounts.

JAS. A. HALL, Auditor.

Statement of Roll.

From the Auburn Woollen Co., asking that the Council take up the question of fire protection for their property with the Company that is building the new dam.—Fire, Water and Light Committee.

From the Clerk of the Water Commissioners asking the Council to authorize a renewal of the agreement between the City and Water Commissioners for the supply of water for public purposes.

From G. W. Hatton, on behalf of R. Gibbs, claiming $200 on the ground that one of Mr. Gibbs' horses, valued at that amount, owing to a defect in the roadbed, at the corner of Bethune and Charlotte streets, fell into an open trench and broke its leg.—Legal Committee.

Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee reported and recommended as follows:

1. That witness fees for the defence in the case of King vs. Gorham, amounting to $98.55, be paid, and that a cheque for this amount be issued to O'Connell & Gordon for this purpose. In this matter your Committee considered letters from the City Solicitor and from the Deputy Attorney-General.

2. That the City renew its membership in the Union of Canadian Municipalities and the Ontario Municipal Association, and that cheques be issued for these purposes.

3. That the request of the Peterborough Water Commissioners that debentures for $10,000 be issued to pay for extensions of mains and laying services in 1910, be granted.

4. That the Peterborough Horticultural Society be given a grant of $500 on the same conditions as last year.

Fire Protection at Auburn.

Mr. James Kennedy waited on the Council in regard to the matter. He complained that for the past seventeen or eighteen years his company had been promised protection. The matter was of supreme importance to the Auburn Woollen Company, which had spent $10,000 in protection. The speaker thought his Company was entitled to protection. They paid out each year between $60,000 and $70,000 in wages. He wished to know as soon as possible what action the Council would taken.

The Mayor promised that the matter would be taken up at the next meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

By-Laws Passed.

A by-law was passed amending the by-law to the salaries of the city firemen, making the increases recommended by the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

Ald. Brown introduced a motion that the men's extra pay be kept back until they had served six months in order, he said, to keep men from going into the brigade for a short time.

Ald. Kerneghan seconded the amendment.

Ald. Morgan was in favour of the by-law as it stood. It would not be fair to do as Ald. Brown suggested, he thought.

Only the mover and seconder voted for the amendment and it was defeated.

By-laws were passed providing for street watering, for the granting of $600 to the Horticultural Society on the usual terms, and for the borrowing of $10,000 to pay for extensions to the water system during 1910.

A Dangerous Corner.

Ald. Graham called the attention of the Council to what he considered the dangerous condition existing at the corner of George and Smith Sts., where, he had been informed, there had been twenty-five or thirty runaways recently. The street railway tracks ran to about ten feet from the pole on the corner, and he thought they should be asked to make a wider curve there to prevent this condition. He moved, seconded by Ald. Kerneghan, that the matter be left in the hands of the Board of Works.—Carried.

Ald. Duncan, Chairman of the Property Committee, asked for instructions in regard to the market tolls. He wished to ascertain the feeling of the Council as to how they should be disposed of.

On motion of Ald. Graham and Kerneghan the Property Committee was given authority to let the contract for the maintenance of the Dan Spence Ambulance for the year.

The Property Committee was also empowered to enter into a contract for a dumping ground for the city.

The Council then adjourned.

V.—Suggestions on Tree Planting.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

WE will give you a little more about planting. In illustration No. 9 you have what is a splendid arrangement for that particular situation. The soil is shallow and the trees will never become large. Wisely, the Norway maple has been selected, and the double row is admissible when you consider the quality of the soil and the rather slow growing tendency of the tree. By the way, I am lecturing on trees from one end of the country to the other, and I find no tree better adapted to all kinds of soil and all kinds of climate (except the far south) than the Norway maple. It can be "spaced" at about twenty feet apart. While, as I say, in this particular instance there is no great objection to having them so close, yet in ordinarily good soil it would be a serious mistake, as the trees would grow one into the other and the beauty of the individual tree would be lost. Thirty feet is a good distance.

NO. 9.—SPLENDID ARRANGEMENT FOR PLANTING WHERE SOIL IS SHALLOW.

It will be noticed also that in this case there is a wide lawn between the sidewalk and the street. In such cases usually a tree will do fairly well, but where the border is narrow under no consideration should the tree be planted there, but on the inside of the sidewalk, on the lawn, about three feet from the walk, as here seen. This gives the most magnificent results. In case the street should be asphalted there is still room for the roots to ramble and gather their food under the sidewalk; on the other hand, in the lawn. If in Philadelphia, for example, the planting had been on the lawn, as indicated, and the "tree butchers" all been hanged, that city at the least calculation, as before stated, would have been $15,000,000 ahead in real estate values. I am writing for the people, so that they will not be misguided by unqualified persons who pose as "professionals" in planting and the care of trees.

It has been the object of the average "tree agent" to sell all he can without regard to whether it be right or wrong in planting. Who is there that does not admire the glory of the individual tree, as seen out in the open field, for example? And who is there that will not gaze in loving admiration on the two cut leaved birch, as seen in illustration No. 10? In the first place, the too thick planting is a waste of money for the trees, and, second, when the branches interlace the beauty of each individual tree is destroyed. Third, too many trees destroy the green sward, and the grass, a good, heavy sod, should always predominate. I favor "clumping" or "grouping," but it should usually be off to one side and should consist of a number of kinds, so as to produce a woodland effect. When ten years ago I published the crude old "Tree Doctor" the "tree agents" and "tree butchers" gnashed their teeth. But the people are getting wise and in a few years will know how to plant and care for their own trees with just as much ease as the average man knows how to take care of his horse or cow.

If your land is heavy the elm or sycamore probably will grow the best for you. If sandy and dry use the maples, birch, linden and oaks, especially the pin oak.

Apple trees refuse to do anything in low, heavy clay land, but the pear likes clay. Cherries, plums and peaches do well in light, dry soils, and all do well on clay if thoroughly underdrained and subsoiled.

An Order Could Be Filled

Customer [illegible] restaurant—Waiter have you any fried eels? Waiter—We have eels, sir, and they are susceptible of being fried.

Opulence.

They numbered four. They absolutely exuded prosperity. The things which they ordered were such as to fill with envy the breast of the man at the next table engaged in consuming the most modest dish disclosed by the bill of fare.

The four were conversing—languid, plutocratic conversation. After a while it turned to the question of money. Evidently they wanted to do something. How much money had they? One of the four took out his pocketbook and counted up a roll of bills.

"Oh, I have a hundred and forty," he said carelessly.

The second and third members of the party went through their pockets.

"I have two hundred and fifteen," remarked one.

"And I have three hundred," said the other.

The fourth waved his hand grandly.

"Never mind, you fellows," he said. "I'll lend you all you want."

Tenderly waiters bore the man at the next table out into the cold air. He will recover.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Thrilling Sport.

At Waikiki, the home of surfboating for pleasure, there is no dangerous reef, but in the south Pacific often the reef is two miles from shore and is exposed at low tide. The waves form almost on the edge of the reef and drop down upon the hard coral perpendicularly, covering the reef for the time being with about two feet of rushing water. The canoe that must jump this reef places itself before a wave, every one paddles for dear life, and if the boat does not touch coral, but is held suspended until a cushion of water rushes onward to receive it, the jump is successfully negotiated, the reef is crossed, and there is but a two mile paddle across the quiet lagoon to the sandy beach. If the bow of the canoe does touch the coral on the down leap there is a shattering of the dugout, and its occupants are sent flying in every direction. One might laugh at this at Waikiki, where there are no sharks, but not in the south seas.—Recreation.

Tons of Pins.

Nothing better shows the bigness of little things than the manufacture of pins. In England there are made each week between fifteen and sixteen tons of the small necessaries, the materials being iron, steel and brass. The yearly production would amount to about 100 tons. The number of pins included in this great weight would make any ordinary figures seem insignificant—would, in fact, defy realization or comprehension. Germany also makes great quantities of pins, her production totalling about 144 tons a year. The United States makes great quantities of pins and imports many from England. Most of the latter country's output is manufactured in Birmingham by two firms, one of which has been in existence nearly a century and the other over a century.—Philadelphia North American.

He Didn't Complain.

Young Wife—This talk about men being so impatient when a woman is getting ready to go anywhere is all nonsense.

Friend—Doesn't your husband complain at all?

Young Wife—No, indeed. Why, last evening I couldn't find my gloves and had a long hunt for half a dozen other things, and yet when I was finally dressed and went downstairs to my husband there he was reading and smoking as calmly as if I wasn't half an hour late.

Friend—Well, I declare! Where were you going?

Young Wife—To prayer meeting.

Method.

Method goes far to prevent trouble in business, for it makes the task easy, hinders confusion, saves abundance of time and instructs those that have business depending what to do and what to hope.

In Search Of Beauty

You Must First Win Health by Getting the Blood Rich and Red

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Every man and every woman has an individual idea of what constitutes beauty.

Is beauty skin deep or does it depend on the glow which health alone can give? Is it due to regularity of feature or to the gracefulness and elasticity which accompany health and vigour?

To win beauty you must first gain health. Rich, red blood is the secret. Dr Chase's Nerve Food is successful and popular because it forms rich, red blood and in this way gives gracefulness to every movement and a healthful, natural glow to the complexion.

Thin blood and weak nerves soon give one a tired, worn out appearance. Worry and anxiety show themselves in wrinkles and care lines. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food enriches the blood, restores vigour to the nerves and drives away headaches and bodily pains.

By filling the arteries with new, red blood, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food rounds out the form to healthful proportions, makes the muscles and tissues firm and strong and gives vivacity to mind and body.

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

NEW CHAMPION LOOMS FROM OUT THE WEST

News from out the west would seem to indicate that a brand new product of the land of fighters is soon to make a splurge in the ranks of the eastern glove men. His name is Jack Dillon, and he hails from Indianapolis. For the past year he has been doing most of his work in Winnipeg and the Northwest, and has a list of knockouts as long as a column, although few crackerjacks appear among them. Recently, however, he gave Jimmy Gardener, of Boston, an artistic lacing. Gardner went to Indianapolis a week ago Wednesday expecting to meet a soft thing in "a local boy of promise." Jimmy got a sound walloping, was beaten in every round, and went home to tell that he had "hurt his hand and couldn't box."

Saturday night in Pittsburg, however, Dillon met Billy Berger, a big heavyweight in Bill Corocoran's stable, and gave him the most artistic trouncing ever handed a man in six rounds, so the Pittsburg papers say. Jih Jah, in the Pittsburg Press, says:

"Jack Dillon, the Hoosier boy, threw dismay into the hearts of scores of South Siders last night when he beat Billy Berger, their favourite fighter. It was a slashing combat with fighting every second of the time. The third round was a stirring one. Spectators stood and shrieked as Berger took the count three, rose to his feet and gallantly tried to stave off the K. O. punch which the onrushing Dillon endeavoured to inflict. Berger weathered the storm, but it was most likely the closest call to slumberland he has experienced in the ring for years.

"Dilon deserved the verdict. He carried the milling all the way, forced Berger to break ground from the first bell, was ever on top of him, balking Berger's offensive and defensive tactics in the bargain. Berger seemede nonplussed at the way the Hoosier bore in on him and kept backing away.

"In the third Dilon drove home a savage righ hooder which struck Berger full on the jaw. Down went the South Sider dazed to the limit. He took the count of nine, got up and tried to ride to safety. Dillon shook and threw him off, and to the floor again he rolled. Again the count of nine was taken. Getting up, Berger caused cheers from his friends by a determined effort to fight back, landing some hard ones on Dillon, but not showing him up in the least. Dillon wanted to score a knockout and finally smashed Berger another dandy right, driving him down. Berger was weak but gritty, and his friends certainly appreciated his display of courage and tenacity. The round ended with Berger hanging on."

OH YOU SUFFRAGETTES

Examiner and Review Girls Played Hockey Last Night

The Examiner and Review girls played hockey at Brock street rink last night—at least they imagined they did. There is a deep mystery around the whole proceedings that prevents the Examiner from giving the clean cut, accurate description that it generally does of athletic contests. From information that has been received this paper is inclined to believe that the majority of goals was in favour of the Review. Owing to the diffidence of the participants to having any masculine eyes watching their playing and to the vigilance of the rink management in carrying out the wishes of the players, the Examiner sporting editor was rejected summarily before hostilities commenced and craved admission in vain until the game was almost over. It is therefore impossible to go into details—anyway details would be painful. On good authority the Examiner learns that the team representing this paper scored the first goal; also we are grieved to say we have been informed that this was the only goal that the Examiner team obtained. It is rumoured that this counter was followed by scores for the Review, how many or in what way scored we must confess we are in utter darkness. From the Review headquarters comes a complaint that the Examiner tried to substitute a mere man in feminine attire for one of the regular team. The Examiner has 'Heard' something about this, but is not prepared to state whether or not this "Art-ful" trick was attempted. It is respectfully suggested to the Review that the next time they have a game with the Examiner they send out the girls' team to play. As to last night's game there is little to be said. Fortunately the ice was hard and there was no difficulty in picking up the stray hat pins, "rats" and other articles which were plenteously distributed over the surface. Mr. Fred Kelly was a most gallant referee, but it is said devoted more time to picking up players than offsides.

HOCKEY

The Pill Pounders defeated the Tool room team in a Mercantile League game at Brock street rink last night by 2 goals to 0, after a snappy and hard fought contest in which both teams showed good form. Both goals were scores in the first half and neither team was able to find the note in the second period. The game was a good exhibition and a large crowd of fans, most of whom were Pill-pounder supporters, made a lot of noise along the side. The winners had the better of the play and should have won farther away. Their team lined up as follows:

"The Strange Case Of Eleanor Cuyler"

By KINGSLAND CROSBY

I.

It was in the glaring sunlight of a hot mid-day in July, at the intersection of Broadway and Forty-Fifth street—one of the busiest localities of all New York—that the crime was committed.

For simplicity, effectiveness, and brazen audacity, nothing in the voluminous records of the Metropolitan police has ever equalled this extraordinary tour de force, which was planned, engineered, and carried out with a generalship amounting almost to genius.

If you are permitted to examine the personal diary of the greatest secret service operator of modern times, you may, perhaps, come upon a brief record reading thus:

Cuyler, Eleanor; white, unmarried; 22 years. Medium height, plump rather than slender; hair brown and wavy; eyes dark blue, large, full of vitality; complexion light, creamy, but tanned by sun; high colour. Dimple in cheek near corner of left eye, visible only when speaking or laughing.

Noticeably erect carriage. No other unusual distinction.

Crime committed between 12, noon, and 1 o'clock, July 16.

If this were merely a story it would not matter much where we should begin, or end. But as it is an effort to unfold for the first time a most curious chapter from real life, about which society of two continents has talked in asides ever since, it is better to proceed chronologically, and in an orderly manner, going forward step by step, page by page, until the recital is concluded. Wherefore we will begin, at about 12.15 o'clock, that fatal July noonday, when Eleanor Cuyler, and her aunt, Mrs. Hazard, were walking slowly through Fifty-fifth street toward Seventh Avenue. They had just come from Winthrop's studio where Eleanor had given a final sitting for her portrait, and glad were they that more sittings would not be required, now that the usual burst of midsummer heat had suddenly taken possession of the great city.

"As I was saying," Mrs. Hazard remarked, trying to keep within the belt of shadow cast by the monotonous row of dwellings flanking the sidewalk, "as I was saying, all I have to do is to go uptown, take a rapid glance through the house, and then meet you at the ferry in time for the two-thirty train."

"Does Hawkins know you're coming to the house?" Eleanor inquired, tilting her white parasol a bit further.

"Yes, I telephoned her, so she'll probably have luncheon ready for me."

"I'm not hungry—if I am I can stop in somewhere on Twenty-third street——. My! I'm glad that old portrait is done, so far as I am concerned."

Mrs. Hazard smiled indulgently.

"Mark my words," she said in rejoinder, "that is a finer portrait than you think. Sheldon Winthrop is going to win, as a painter, and I'm not sure but your picture will help him a long step toward success."

"Oh, he's a nice boy!" Eleanor assented, with an impatient little flirt of her parasol, "but he's some distance yet from the 'R. A.' hall-mark.

By this time the two ladies had reached the corner of Seventh ave. A surface-car, bound downtown, clanged and whirred toward them.

"If you hurry a little you can catch it," Mrs. Hazard suggested. "Don't forget the two-thirty boat!"

"If I'm not there," the girl called over her shoulder, "don't wait for me—I may take a notion to run out and spend the night with Sallie!"

"All right!" Mrs. Hazard replied. She stood still for a moment watching her niece step aboard the car, and waved her a little farewell as she entered the huge, yellow vehicle, which lunged forward on its way down town.

At that moment—in broad day light, from one of the busiest spots of all New York—Eleanor Cuyler, daughter of a noted financier, herself well known and beloved by society, vanished as completely as if she had been carried from earth to sky by supernatural agency.

II.

The foregoing events, which we have endeavoured to record with complete exactness, happened on Monday, July 16. Eleanor's father had spent the preceding Saturday and Sunday at his summer place, according to his usual custom, which was well known; as was also the further fact that this year he was spending the rest of the week in town, working all day at his office, and sitting up late at night with railroad presidents, and so-called "coal barons," and labour-leaders, in an effort to prevent a threatened strike of anthracite miners which would seriously affect the November elections.

Ever since the death of Cuyler's wife, years previous, his sister, Mrs. Hazard, had presided over his several homes, and had tried as best she might to be a mother to his motherless only child. Under her love and care and sympathetic oversight, the child had grown to be a charming, accomplished young woman, who had seen the best of smart society here and abroad, who had explored the Yosemite, coached through Norway, fished and hunted in Canadian wilds, and had managed to escape the idea that she had a "mission in life." Once, when home for a vacation in her Junior year, she told her father that she sometimes thought she ought to devote her time and talents and fortune to working among the very poor in an East Side settlement; and old Mortimer Cuyler came mighty near taking her out of college on the moment. But he did not—he recognized in this desire a germ of modern collegiate existence which attacks almost every sympathetic girl student.

"Your mission in life, my dear," he said, when he had swallowed a lump of instant wrath, "is simply to live, and be joyous and happy. Five years from now, if you want to, you can speak to me again about a home-missionary career. . . . Not before then."

Eleanor had subsided. Only two or three of the five years had passed, but the germ had died. And she had lived, at home and abroad, happy-light-hearted, always welcomed everywhere, and so great a favourite that she was as much demand for week-end visits as if she were an eligible bachelor. She went away so often for a few days that Mrs. Hazard thought nothing of it when the girl failed to meet her at the ferry.

"She has decided to go up the Hudson and visit Sallie, after all," she said to herself, knowing that a telephone to the town house would bring a maid and sufficient clothing to Eleanor wherever she might be.

The railroad journey across Long Island was as hot and dusty and uncomfortable as it always is in summer, and right glad was Mrs. Hazard to leave the train and step into a waiting carriage, which rapidly spun over three miles or so to the cool, shady entrance of her brother's place.

At four o'clock she telephoned Cuyler's office to ascertain whether by any chance he were coming out dine and spend the night. Young Johnson, Cuyler's secretary, at the other end of the wire, replied in the negative: Mr. Cuyler was spending the night on board his yacht, Norseman, cruising in the Sound. Three or four gentlemen were to be with him in an important conference, for which reason Mrs. Hazard would please regard the matter as extremely confidential.

Few financiers of prominence would trust the women of their families with such information. Cuyler, however, knew and appreciated his sister's calibre of discretion.

Mrs. Hazard rang off, and sat down in a cool corner of the great veranda, with a half-sigh. It was all wrong, she felt, rather than thought connectedly. If Mortimer had only been content to stay up in the little New England town where they were born and where he had lived until out of college, he would have been a much happier man—and perhaps a more useful man. He never would have succeeded his father as principal of the Academy, but if his energies had only been divided between home-making and business, and local improvements, it would have been much better. They would have enjoyed a quiet, serene, companionable life and he would now be willing to retire, with an income of a few thousands. Eleanor would be happily married to some industrious, substantial young man, and would be making a home of her own; whereas—Mrs. Hazard's eye caught headlines of heavy type in a newspaper on the table. She picked up the sheet and read two articles side by side about her brother. One told how he had just sent a check for three millions to found an institution for bacteriological research, the other—occupying half a page—was devoted to Cuyler's work of the moment in trying to bring "coal barons" and labour leaders together so as to avoid a strike which might impoverish tens of thousands of people, and bring suffering to hundreds of thousands more during the next winter.

Like a sensible woman Mrs. Hazard put down the newspaper, ceased the impossible task of trying to fathom the incomprehensible laws of nature, which single out some men for incessant herculean work, and went to her room to rest until it should be time to dress for dinner.

That evening passed, and Tuesday, and Tuesday night, with no word from Eleanor. This in itself was not strange, but the hot weather, and the thought of that possible other life in a quiet Vermont village, made her nervous. So quite early on Wednesday she telephoned Sallie Hamilton over on the Hudson, and learned that Eleanor had not been there for a month.

She was shocked her momentarily. Then she decided that Eleanor was making a visit elsewhere, and rang up Cuyler's town house to ascertain whether the girl had sent for a maid and an outfit sufficient to last for a few days.

Hawkins, the housekeeper, replied that no word had been received from Miss Cuyler; and then it was that Mrs. Hazard called for her brother's office.

In five minutes she had Mortimer Cuyler on the wire, and told him that she could get no word of Eleanor.

In five minutes more he had given her explicit instructions to ring up one after the other, every Eleanor had, whom she might possibly visit, on the New Jersey coast, along the Hudson, and in Westchester County, adding finally that Mrs. Hazard was to telephone him again as soon as this was done.

Then Cuyler spoke rapidly to Johnson, and the secretary hurriedly left the banking house on an errand that took him to every police station and hospital in the great, sullen, cruel city—and finally to the Morgue.

III.

The express which had pulled out of Jersey City at midnight slowly panted its way into the dingy station at Washington, Saturday morning, and came to a stop more than an hour late. The first person to leave the train was a tall, broad-shouldered, thickset man, somewhat past middle age, who swung from the forward steps of the first Pullman before the wheels had fairly ceased moving, and made his way through the train-shed with long, rapid strides.

His whole being was the personification of power, decision, force—mental as well as physical. He stepped lightly, but each footstep seemed a command. One hand, bronzed and shaded by dark hairs, gripped a small satchel; the other carried a lightly rolled umbrella. Shoes of light tan, grey trousers and sack coat, white pique waistcoat, dark blue four-in-hand tie bearing a stickpin with a single pearl, were features of his costume. A straw hat with generous brim was pulled slightly forward, shielding from the glare of the hot July morning a pair of grey eyes; wonderful eyes, deep-set, piercing, gleaming, unyielding, before which men quailed, and hesitated, and became silent. Usually steady, direct, uncompromising, those eyes to-day were restless, anxious—as well they might be; for Mortimer Cuyler had passed three sleepless nights, and practically two days of ceaseless apprehension.

As he strode into the station and through it toward the street, those whom he met (the few passengers, the usual riff-raff of negro hangers-on, and the railway employees, instinctively fell back, making way for him. A minute later he stepped into a ramshackle cab and spoke two words.

"Beecham, quick!"

Sir James Whitney Announces Rules for the Legislature—The Members Must Not Miss Prayers

THE LATE COMERS

Toronto, March 8.—Sir James Whitney gave a delicate hint to those members who consider their time too precious to be in their places at prayers, and the opening proceedings of the House. This was yesterday afternoon, in moving the second reading of the bill with respect to the members' sessional indemnity.

The Premier said he regretted the absence of so large a proportion of the members, including the leader of the Opposition, but it was not so important in his case, as he could "pick it up so readily." Hon. A. G. MacKay, however, emerged from the Opposition corridor and entered the House while the Premier was making his introductory remarks.

The bill, said the Prime Minister, was one which the House would be free to amend, as it exclusively concerned the internal management of the Legislature.

The bill was printed with the amount per diem pay and deductions for absence in blank.

In the extremely improbable event of a session lasting less than thirty days, Sir James suggested a daily indemnity of $20. Should the session continue thirty days or over, the indemnity is placed in accordance with the supplementary estimates at $1,400.

The bill allows a certain number of days' absence without explanation by the absentees. Sir James said that, considering the short sessions, six days was, in his opinion, the maximum which should be fixed, especially as the bill allowed one day for traveling to the Legislature and absence for sickness.

A deduction would be made for other absences. The Premier suggested that the House fix the deduction not less than $10 or more than $15, a larger amount would be neither wise nor necessary.

R. R. Gamey, Manitoulin, in support of his bill to amend the Game Act, made some pointed suggestions to Hon. Dr. Reaume. He had good reason for wanting to limit the bag of partridges to 50 birds per man per season — reasons that the members from old Ontario were not in a position to comprehend. They did not know of the wanton slaughter of birds in the newer sections of the province by sports from Toronto and Hamilton. He regarded it as practicable to limit the number of partridge as it was to limit the catch of bass.

"I don't know why I have been left off the game committee, because I come from a great game country, but I think there is much in the Game Act that needs amendment."

A. E. Donovan's (Brockville) bill to amend the Charity Aid Act, so that municipalities may agree to pay a fixed amount towards the up-keep of hospitals, was given its second reading, and was referred to the municipal committee. The bill proposed to tax every municipality 70 cents per patient sent by it to a general hospital.

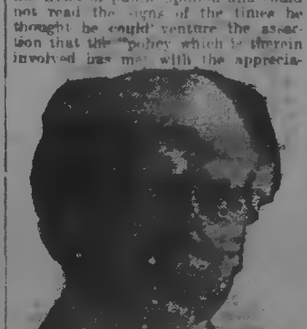
SIR WILFRID LAURIER'S VINDICATION OF THE RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT

The Premier Annihilates the Arguments of the Opposition ---Announces That the Government Will Go Right Ahead---A Comprehensive Speech.

Ottawa, March 8.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's vindication of the international reciprocal trade agreement was comprehensive, lofty and compelling. To its stirring eloquence was added the note of conviction of the righteousness of the Government's policy, of confidence in its enthusiastic acceptance by the people, and of determination to carry through Canada's part in the undertaking. "We shall go on, whether the Opposition follow or not. We will drag them on, even against their will. Our policy has been, is, and will be, so long as the Canadian people continue to place in us the confidence they have shown during fifteen years, to seek markets wherever markets can be found."

In this declaration the Prime Minister met at the outset the projected demand of the Opposition for the indefinite postponement of further consideration of the proposals. There will be no waiting for Washington.

At the outset Sir Wilfrid Laurier reviewed the discussion of the agreement since it was first introduced into the House by Mr. Fielding over a month ago. It had been discussed and canvassed in the press, in public meetings and in Parliament, and unless he had greatly misapprehended the trend of public opinion and could not read the signs of the times he thought he could venture the assertion that the "policy which is therein involved has met with the appreciation, nay [illegible] appreciation of the Canadian people." [illegible] Opposition [illegible] answer to the [illegible] Laurier said he would not stop to discuss the merits [illegible] opinions of the [illegible] Mr. Foster [illegible] Grand Trunk [illegible]



SIR WILFRID LAURIER

Opposition, and in that they would persevere until the evening of the next polling day. He was well aware that the policy of the Government had not been universally accepted, and that an organization had been created in Toronto and Montreal for the purpose of fighting the agreement. These people were acting within their rights and although he would not underestimate the importance of the movement, he did not think there was any cause for alarm. Many of the objections to the agreement lacked force and opposiiteness; others were worthy of consideration, not from inherent strength but from the circumstance that they were inspired by a strange misconception as to what would be the result and consequence of the policy involved.

He declared that the relations between Canada and the United States were a blot upon our common civilization, and contended that when Sir John A. Macdonald introduced the national policy in 1878 he did so as a means of securing reciprocity. In 1911 we now had it, and yet men doubted and hesitated. The agreement was condemned as unfair and hostile, and men told us, "Stop, proceed no further, let the injustice remain, let the hostility remain, because upon injustice and hostility the Canadian Confederation depends for its existence."

He declined to accept the argument that because this matter had not been discussed before the people, the Government was debarred from entering into the agreement. What mandate, he asked, had Lord Elgin in 1854, when he went to Washington to enter into a trade arrangement? What mandate had the Government of 1864 to put through Parliament the resolution which proposed Confederation? Not a word about it had ever been heard by the people. When Canada assented in 1871 to the Washington treaty of that year, the question was unknown to them.

"In the face of the records on these questions," he added, "it is childish for any man to challenge the right of this Government to follow the course it is doing."

Sir Wilfrid repeated that the object of the agreement was simply to get better prices for the products of the Canadian farmer. This was a proposition so obvious that he was surprised it should receive the treatment it had received on the part of the opponents of the measure. He then outlined the four principal objections taken to the agreement by the leader of the Opposition, and proceeded to deal with them in detail. They were (1) that the effect would be to divert the carrying trade from Canadian to American [illegible] (2) that it would destroy our natural resources, (3) that it would [illegible] our industries, (4) that it would involve our autonomy and [illegible] ultimately in the American republic.

In regard to the first objection, Sir Wilfrid said that it might be discussed from two points of view; that of the goods going from Canada into the United States for the purpose of being carried over to Great Britain, and the goods going from Canada to the United States for consumption there. In regard to the first, the situation would not be affected one iota. At the present time goods go from Canada to be shipped from American ports without paying duty, in the same way American goods come to Canada to be shipped out by Montreal, Halifax and St. John, without paying duty.

The Premier agreed with the argument that interprovincial trade was important, but contended that the Canadian people could not consume all of their natural products.

"It has been stated in this discussion, and repeated in the press of Great Britain," said the Premier, "that by this arrangement we were putting an end to every possibility of mutual, preferential trade with Great Britain. The member from Brandon made that argument, and I have heard it from the other side of the House. I take positive issue with that statement, and I say more: that statement does no bear criticism; it has only to be analyzed for its falseness to be shown.

"I now pass to a more important objection," said Sir Wilfrid, "really the only objection of any consequence that I know of. That objection is that this agreement will imperil our industries? This agreement is concerned chiefly with natural products. There are no manufactured products dealt with except agricultural implements. In negotiating this agreement we have adhered strictly to the terms of the resolution which was adopted at the Liberal convention of 1893, in which the Liberal party declared for a treaty of reciprocity in natural products and a carefully considered list of manufactured products. Why did we put this restriction in our resolution? Because there is a vast difference between reciprocity in natural products and reciprocity in manufactured goods. This is the reason we have acted with this prudence.

"The only industry affected is that of agricultural implements, on some of which the duty has been reduced from 17 1-2 to 15, and on others from 30 to 13 per cent. It would have been pleasing, for myself at all events, to have gone beyond that, but we considered that if we did, we would perhaps not do justice to the men who have invested money in these establishments.

Appreciation

1910 was a banner year with us, but 1911 carries even greater promise, because we have thousands of patients in this city and vicinity who are wearing glasses prescribed by us, many of whom could not be fitted elsewhere, and we know that they will not lose an opportunity of speaking a good word for us.

We take this occasion to acknowledge our indebtedness to our friends and patrons, our appreciation of their good will and faith in us, which have helped to make our success so great. We need not diagnise the fact that we believe that we have deserved well of you. That if you have had confidence in us and have bestowed upon us your patronage it is because we have done something to warrant it. We have done "the best we could" and we purpose to keep right on doing so.

We are deeply grateful to our friends and customers for their loyalty. We ask for and hope to merit a continuance of the same.

CLEAR-CUT AND CONVINCING SPEECH

DEFICIT OF $553,363.25

Vigorous Colonization Policy for Northern Ontario Advocated---Industrial Education--Scarcity of Teachers---Reforestration and Other Subjects Eloquently Dealt With.

One can scarcely realize the irritation that such explanations naturally cause rural school trustees, who are working overtime endeavoring to get qualified teachers. I fancy I see the honorable member for West Hastings giving this explanation, particularly to the trustees of a section where the assessment is over $40,000, and where though they advertise once and have no applications from any qualified teacher they must still spend money in advertising a second time before the inspector is allowed, by a superlatively foolish regulation of the Department, to grant a permit to any person to teach in that school.

First then, there is a scarcity of labor of all kinds, next, we are a nomadic race, and then the honorable member for West Hastings, not seeming to have satisfied himself that he has given any sane explanation of the difficulty, consoles the trustees in the rural section with the information that there is a great surplus of teachers over in England, and that we may import them. This, Sir, is comforting advice to parents, especially of the poorer class, whose sons and daughters are practically debarred from taking up the teaching profession owing to the centralization policy of the Government and the wiping out of our model schools. I say, Sir, to debar our own young men and women from entering the teaching profession, and then to suggest to the trustees that they import teachers from England, is adding insult to injury, and I repeat were it not for the serious condition of affairs such explanations would be a very interesting burlesque.

Then, Sir, there is that guileless youth, that extremely innocent young man, the honorable member for South Renfrew, who comes forward with an explanation. How extremely guileless he is! "I will show the Honorable Leader of the Opposition," says he, "what is the cause of the scarcity of teachers in the rural districts," and holding up in his hand a report of a speech by the President of Toronto University, which apparently says that 25 per cent. of the university graduates go west, he gives this as a complete explanation for the scarcity of teachers in the townships. How innocent, how extremely innocent the honorable member is! He is under the impression that young men and women immediately upon being graduated from Toronto University go forth into the townships to teach in our rural schools. He is evidently trying to get in line with the Premier's explanation, that he has turned things upside down, and he will have university graduates go out to the townships to teach public schools, and doubtless he will have our model and normal trained teachers go and lecture in the university. On second thought, however, I am inclined to think the honorable gentleman is trying to qualify for a position in the Education Department, and is endeavoring to display his fitness for such a place by seeking to show that he knows absolutely nothing about educational affairs. He is shrewd enough, Sir, to know that if he is to be in line, an absolute condition precedent to his receiving an appointment is that he should show utter ignorance of educational affairs generally, and particularly of any question bearing upon the welfare of our rural schools.

Technical Education.

Many a time and oft have I discussed this question on the floor of this House and elsewhere. For reasons already stated I do not purpose to occupy the attention of the House but for a moment on this question. On the main merits of the case there can be no justification whatever for this Government's delay in adopting a full and sweeping system of technical and industrial education, that will cover at least all manufacturing centres in this province. Nothing, Sir, would add more to the success of this province as a manufacturing centre than to have well trained, skilled mechanics in all our workshops. Any educational system that tends to lead or drive young men or young women to the professions, and to take them away from either the farm or the workshop is ill-balanced, and should at once be adjusted. I have frequently pointed out, Sir, that this province spends on an average per annum $1.39 on every public and separate school pupil, $4.66 on every high school and collegiate institute student, $112 on every model and normal student, $126 on every university student. Sir, I do not complain of these expenditures; my voice, I hope, will never be raised against this or any other Government making as liberal a grant as possible for education generally; but what, Sir, is this province doing, or what has it ever done for the large class of young people who are forced to leave school at an early age, say from thirteen to fifteen years? Can the province afford any longer to take the position that it owes them no duty, and has no responsibility whatever with reference to them? This question has both a financial and an ethical side. Once again I say, Sir, that this province can no longer, from either an educational or ethical standpoint, afford to say to the twenty, or thirty, or forty thousand students, whom chill penury drives from our public schools to the workshop and such like places, that it has no obligation whatever and owes them nothing whatever. All along the line substantial aid is given to the high school student and university student, and none to the lad whose parents possibly cannot afford to send him to school even to the high school stage. In other words we help the sons of the wealthier and decline to give any assistance whatever to the poorer lad.

Germany perhaps, furnishes an illustration of the splendid results arising from a well considered and fully developed technical and industrial system of education. Here, our continuation classes are conducted purely along the old scholastic lines; there, the continuation class is practically an industrial continuation class. Beginning with the continuation class, the state never loses sight of the practical side of life. The question of technical and industrial education is so closely allied with that of trade and commerce that one can readily understand why the empire as a whole pays so much attention to this matter.

In Germany the schools are, roughly speaking, supported as follows: 22 per cent. of the cost is paid by tuition fees; 49 per cent. by grants and donations by municipalities, employers of labor, and from other philanthropic sources, while the empire as a whole contributes about 28 per cent. It is a matter of common knowledge that in every village, every town and city, in this province a larger number of the more ambitious of our young men and women have for years been endeavoring to get some general knowledge of the scientific principles that underlie their life vocations through schools of correspondence. These young men and women have been forced to leave our public and separate schools at an early age, and having commenced life's battle, realize the necessity for a better equipment, and the result is that they sign contracts with the outside schools. In nine cases out of ten they find it impossible by means of such correspondence schools to get ahead, and they drop the course and pay large fees with very unsatisfactory returns. It has been stated that the Province of Ontario annually sends out every year approximately $1,000,000 to these correspondence schools, situated south of the line. If this estimate is approximately true, and I think and it is supported by teachers interested in industrial training, it absolutely demand on the part of our young men and women for technical industrial training. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the amount of money thus sent out annually is even only $800,000, and placed to the support of the industrial schools on the same basis as now exists in Germany, namely that the state should pay 24 per cent. it will be readily seen that there is now going forth from the province an amount of money that will justify the additional expenditure in all of $200,000. The tremendous amount of money practically wasted by these ambitious young men and women all over the province is another strong argument in favor of immediate action on the part of this Government. There should have been no delay. We on this side of the House contended last year that this Government should appoint a commission to ascertain the facts of interprovincial educational propaganda in favor of a general system of industrial education.

Text Books.

Honorable gentlemen speak of the wonderful saving to the people of the province in connection with school books. The honorable member for Monck says that during the currency of the agreement the people of this province will save $360,000; the honorable member for West Hastings puts it at $750,000; the honorable member for West Toronto raises the ante, and makes it a clear million. How beautifully, and indefinitely it grows with each calculation! Not only in Toronto, among retail dealers here; but also in every village, every town, and every other city in the Province of Ontario, every one knows what a tremendous advantage has been given to one large departmental store in this city, to the detriment of every retail trader in the Province of Ontario. The agreement with the Eaton Company is drawn so as to make the school book contract a direct advertising medium for that large departmental store. The bargain is so made, that a farmer living out in the township, can buy direct as cheap from the T. Eaton Co., Limited, as the retail dealer can. What is the result of such an agreement, and what else could be the result? None other than to induce people all over the Province of Ontario to write direct to this large departmental store for their books. Then, Sir, for example the books go back wrapped in a "bargain day" advertisement of, say, millinery, ready made clothing, or whatever the line may be, with the result that the orders pour in through the mail order department for purchases along these lines, and thus the whole retail trade of the province is hit by this cunningly devised agreement. The agreement places every heartstone in the whole province directly tributary to the Eaton departmental store, and invites everybody in the province to send in orders by mail for all classes of goods.

Then, Sir, as to the cost of the Readers: the publisher is furnished with the copyright; the province pays a committee to prepare the manuscript and make the selections for the Readers; all plates and electros are paid for by the province; the type is actually set up, and then all this is handed over to the Eaton Company, and they are asked to run the Readers off. And the people are deceived and humbugged with the statement that 49c. is the whole cost of the Readers.

Reciprocity.

Now, Sir, I take up the question, which the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer introduced very naively into this debate, technically justifying its introduction on account of its alleged effect on the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway. Without discussing the correctness or incorrectness of the principal reason given, let me say at the outset that I do not propose to give a silent vote on this question. The honorable member for West Toronto justifies the discussion of reciprocity by this House on the ground that it affects the people of Ontario, and therefore we have a right to discuss it. By parity of reasoning, and because education, and all the laws and regulations in connection with it in this province, affect all members at Ottawa who come from this province, they then will be justified in placing on the order paper at Ottawa a resolution with reference to our model schools or our normal schools, or some other such question. I fancy, Sir, if some Liberal member at Ottawa from Ontario, were to attempt to do this, not only would the occupants of the treasury benches here, but the member for West Toronto would join them in a pretty violent denunciation of any such Ottawa politician and would raise a tremendous row about the fact that the provincial field was being invaded. I regret, Sir, the growing tendency in this House among Conservatives in their desire to have a fling at the Government at Ottawa. What must the necessary result of such a practice be, if Conservatives of this House unnecessarily go out of their way to find fault with the Liberals at Ottawa, and similarly the Liberals here were to do the same with reference to Conservative members at Ottawa? The necessary result will be to lower the tone of debate in this House, and to lower the dignity and standing of this Legislature. Anyone can readily see that the public under such circumstances would be justified in concluding, and could come to no other conclusion, than that the members of this Legislature were mere henchmen or shouters for the politicians at Ottawa, and thus this Legislature would hold, in public opinion, a decidedly inferior position. I have no such views, Sir, of the rights and duties of a Provincial Legislature. We act, Sir, by the same sovereign right that politicians at Ottawa do; we derive our powers and responsibilities from the same source, and we ought not in any way to lower or degrade our position. My position is this, Sir, that while every member of this House as a citizen of this Dominion has an absolute right to discuss any question that affects the Dominion, it is doubtful procedure for us, I care not what the precedent may be, as a Legislature to deal with the question of Trade and Commerce, which by the British North America Act is assigned to the Dominion Parliament. However, Sir, leaving this aspect of the question aside: as a matter of pure party politics, I welcome the discussion of this subject upon the floor of this House, though I doubt the wisdom of it. I am bound to admit, Sir, that the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer realized that he was treading upon doubtful ground, and he took great pains to explain that he only referred to the question because of his fear that if the reciprocity agreement is consummated the result will be injurious to the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway, which is owned and operated by this province, and therefore upon that ground, and that ground alone, did he seem to justify the introduction of the discussion. In thus narrowing the reason for introducing this subject, the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer was more careful and judicious than certain other honorable gentlemen who have spoken.

The Treaty of 1854-66.

I am afraid, Sir, that the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer has given his party a load that they will never attempt to lift when he says, that not only would reciprocity, if adopted, not be a good thing, but when he goes out of his way at great length to quote figures and argue that the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 to 1866 was very injurious to the old provinces of Canada. One can understand any honorable gentleman taking the position that circumstances and conditions have changed, owing to policies adopted since 1866, that it does not now follow that even if the old treaty was beneficial to Canada that the adoption of a similar one would now be so; but, as I have said, the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer asks his party to lift the tremendous load of proving to the people of this province that the old treaty was disastrous to the people of the old provinces. His argument is meaningless unless this were his object, and, Sir, I am quite certain that the older farmers of this province, who recollect the facts, will have difficulty in understanding the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer's view points; in fact, they will be amazed at the load he has placed upon his party. They will recall the disastrous effect the abrogation of the treaty in 1866 had upon prices: wool, that prior to the abrogation sold for 30c. a pound dropped immediately to 15c.; lambs that sold for $4.50 dropped immediately to $2.50; the prices of horses, cattle and hogs were cut in halves as soon as the treaty was abrogated; barley, which sold for $1.20 to $1.25 per bushel dropped immediately to 40 or 50 cents, and so on, for practically everything the farmer had to sell. When, therefore, the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer essays the Herculean task of proving that the results of the abrogation of the treaty were beneficial, at all events to the farming community, they, to put it mildly, will indeed be amazed.

Both Sides Desired Reciprocity.

If the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer is right and the results of the treaty of 1854-1866 were injurious to the Old Provinces of Canada, how under the sun does he explain the ever-occurring and persistently recurring attempts of the Dominion leaders to secure a renewal of the treaty?

ADAM HALL

HON. MR. MACKAY ON PROVINCIAL FINANCES

What has become of his loyalty to the principles advocated by Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir John Thompson, Sir Charles Tupper and others? Shades of the great departed, how your influence has waned with our Provincial Treasurer! The honorable gentleman, in the extreme position he has taken, turn- down the whole record of the Conservative party on the question of trade relations. Let me, Sir, briefly summarize the attempts made to secure fairer trade relations with the Union to the South of us. The treaty was abrogated in 1866. Confederation was consummated in 1867. In 1869 Sir John Rose, who was then Finance Minister, was sent to Washington by the Conservative Government, and with Sir E. Thornton, the British Ambassador, made an ineffectual attempt to obtain a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty. In 1871, the late Sir John A. Macdonald and his British colleagues who negotiated the Washington treaty, endeavored to secure a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty, but ineffectually. In 1872, the United States National Board of Trade petitioned Congress for renewal of reciprocity, and the then Conservative Government at Ottawa declared its readiness to accept the same. In 1874, the Hon. George Brown was sent by the then Liberal Government to Washington, and in company with Sir E. Thornton, British Ambassador, actually secured an agreement to a treaty, which was not, however, subsequently ratified by the United States Senate. In 1879, the Customs Tariff prepared by the then Conservative Government at Ottawa inaugurating the National Policy made a standing offer for Free Trade or reduced rates on a long list of United States products if the United States would act similarly with reference to Canadian products. The Hon. Mr. Tilley, Minister of Finance, on March 14th, 1879 (see Hansard 1879, vol. 1, p. 415) refers to "a resolution that will be laid on the table containing a proposition to this effect that as to articles named which are the natural products of the country, including lumber, if the United States take off the duty in part or in whole we are prepared to meet them with equal concessions. The Government believe in a Reciprocity Tariff." Sir Charles Tupper in the same year as reported on page 464, vol. 1, Hansard, said: "My honorable friend, the Finance Minister, also proposes to insert in the bill the statement that, when the Americans shall reduce their tariff on these natural products we will reduce ours to the same extent, and that if they wipe out the duties altogether, we will admit their products free. At no distant date we shall enjoy all the advantages which we possessed under the Reciprocity Treaty." "All the advantages," note the words, and yet the Honorable Provincial Treasurer would now have us believe that there were no advantages such as Sir Charles Tupper speaks of! In 1887, Sir Charles Tupper, acting in concert with Sir L. Sackville West and Joseph Chamberlain, British plenipotentiaries, went to Washington to negotiate a treaty as to fisheries, etc., and proposed to discuss tariff arrangements looking towards the old arrangement, with no practical results. Later, Sir, such a treaty was actually arranged by the aforesaid commissioners, and was actually signed, but the United States did not ratify the agreement. If the Honorable Provincial Treasurer will look at the Canadian Statutes of 1879 and 1888 he will find that they contain standing offers for reciprocal trade in a long list of articles.

In 1891 the Canadian Ministers were sent to act with the British Ambassador in a consultation with the United States Ministers with a view to obtaining better reciprocal trade relations, and, Sir, so important did the late Sir John A. Macdonald consider the subject that he made it a pretext for an appeal to the country in order that he might have a mandate from the people, which he received, and upon which he acted in an attempt to secure freer trade relations. In 1892 the then Conservative Government continued their negotiations. The Canadian Customs Tariff Act of 1894 contains a standing proposal, in several of its clauses, to entirely remit or to reduce duties on a long list of articles produced by the United States, provided similar concessions are made with reference to Canadian products; so that, Sir, you will observe that as late as 1894, that is two years before the Conservative Government went out of power, they placed this standing offer upon the Canadian Statutes. Their course throughout was persistently consistent, and consistently persistent in an attempt to get freer trade relations, and yet the Honorable Provincial Treasurer takes the position that even the old Reciprocity Treaty was an injury to Canada. The late Sir John Thompson in 1894 (see Hansard vol. I. pp. 1505-6) informed the House that, "the Conservative Government had dispatched an agent to Washington to ascertain whether it was the desire of the United States Government to enter into negotiations with the Government of Canada on the subject of Tariff Concessions." In 1896 the Liberals continued similar negotiations but the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer tells us, now, that standing that the leaders of both parties were a unit in believing that freer trade relations would be beneficial to Canada, that such is not the case, and that as a matter of fact the old treaty was injurious. The honorable gentleman, I repeat, Sir, has taken on during this debate an extremely heavy load. He has swallowed his own past record with reference to taxation of corporations, the Succession Duties' Act, the Brewers and Distillers' Licenses, the proper classification of accounts, as to Indian treaty No. 3; but he now, Sir, adds to this the Herculean task of swallowing the whole past commercial history of the Dominion Conservative party at Ottawa. He says in effect with reference to those great chieftains, the late Sir John A. Macdonald, the late Sir Leonard Tilley, the late Sir John Thompson, and others, "I shouted for you in your lifetime, but under pressure of party exigiences now I recall all that, and I say to you now that you were all wrong." I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this is rather a heavy load that the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer attempts to lay upon the shoulders of his provincial following: and I apprehend that he will experience very considerable difficulty indeed in getting them to swing into line on such a heretofore unheard of and absurd proposal.

The T. & N. O. Railway.

Now, Sir, with reference to the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway, instead of endeavoring to work himself and the province into a state of alarm over the decreasing earning powers of this railway as a result of proposed freer trade relations, let me show him the better way. Allow me to point out to him, first, that this road was in its conception intended to be in its early history a colonization road. As such, Sir, I think it still should be treated; that this Government has an entirely wrong conception as to its duties with reference to that railroad, and with reference to Northern Ontario. It is an absolute mistake to charge excessive freight and other rates in order to attempt to produce annually a balance on the right side. It does not lie in the mouth of any citizen of Old Ontario to say to this or any other Government, you must at once make that road absolutely pay. The pioneers have a right to be treated liberally. It is true that the forest wealth and the mineral wealth belongs not to the Northland especially, but to the whole Province of Ontario; but, it is also equally true, Sir, that the province has ever since Confederation derived a very large percentage of its revenue from that Northland. Honorable gentlemen opposite have been even fulsome in their laudation of the Honorable the Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines. I desire to ask him frankly but firmly the question "Are we doing the square thing by the Northland, by ourselves, and the Province of Ontario?" The Honorable the Premier, in his speech on the Address, took the strange position that if Ontario increases its population there is apparently no beneficial result, but there is an extra outlay by way of aid to municipal government, providing lockups, etc. The inference from such an argument is that it does not pay this province to secure settlers for our Northland. It is a strange coincidence, of course only a coincidence—a case of great minds, etc.—that almost on the very day upon which the Honorable the Premier delivered himself of this strange doctrine, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, speaking before the Empire Club, advanced exactly the same argument. The argument of both, and that of the latter as published by Toronto Saturday Night, simply means this: that if the province spends money in securing settlers for Northern Ontario, and opens up and settles new townships, that the results will be increased expenditure by the province, with the further inferential result that the province derives no benefit from these settlers; but that the Dominion is greatly benefited by way of revenue received under tariff regulations. There is an element of truth in the contention, namely, that increased population encouraged by this province would indirectly be a benefit to the whole Dominion; but it is economic heresy to say that the same increased population is not a direct benefit to the province. Mr. Sir, we roll back the map of settlement do we not thereby of absolute necessity increase the value of the crown lands and crown timber lying immediately beyond the line of settlement? Does any sane man doubt this? Sir, if we increase the population, or as I have already said, roll back the map of settlement, do we not "ipso facto," of necessity, increase the land and timber wealth of the province lying directly behind the line of settlement? These settlers will in time form companies, and develop interests, pay for commercial and other charters through the Provincial Secretary's Department, and will thus directly increase the finances of the province, to say nothing of the indirect benefit that will be obtained by developing trade between the Northland and North Bay, Toronto, and other points.

More Railways.

I fear, Sir, that this Government is deliberately retarding the development of Northern Ontario, owing to the fact that it does not treat the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway as a colonization road, but has endeavored by excessive freight and other charges to make it pay. Then again, Sir, the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway should have branch colonization lines. If, for example, the mining camps are real camps, and I think they undoubtedly are, why should the Government not at once build into Elk Lake, Gowganda and Montreal River district. Shoot out your feeders to the main railway—you cannot afford to stand shivering on the brink of duty! We must build these roads, and they will prove effective and paying feeders of the main road. The original conception of this Government road was that it was to pass through the clay belt and reach James Bay, and thus tap the untold fishery wealth of these waters. This is the only way to develop this Northland. The Government should at once adopt an up-to-date, aggressive and progressive policy.

Town Sites Should Be Taxed.

Let me deal with other points, Sir, that are hindering and retarding the progress of the north. Years ago this House unanimously decided that some recognition should be made by way of land grants to the volunteers for their services; but this House unanimously made the mistake of allowing such land grants to be taken up in different townships, and so long as they remained in the hands of the volunteer they remained untaxed. This retarded development and progress, and steps have been taken to remedy this evil. Why then, Sir, should a similar mistake be made by this Government in connection with town sites? If the Province of Ontario is determined to own one out of every four town lots then, I say, the Government should pay taxes on these lots. Why should the province take the unearned increment, the increment earned by the hardy settler, and not join with the settlers in paying their fair share of taxes in order that proper municipal improvements may be undertaken?

Prospector's Rights.

Then again, Sir, the Government's extreme desire to make money out of the north is shown in its dealing with prospectors. When it was proposed to tax the prospector before he could go out and search for a mine, and the amount fixed by the Government was placed at $10, we, on this side of the House vigorously opposed this, and argued that if it was requisite to charge any fee the fee should only be nominal. That $10 fee, I am glad to say, has since been reduced to $5. It should have been reduced to $1.

Then again, Sir, if this prospector is fortunate enough to make a discovery, the province charges him $10 for filing his claim, and $3 for transfer of the same. This is more than is charged in any of the Old Provinces for a similar service.

Assessment Work.

Then again, Sir, as if we did not place difficulties enough in the way of the prospector, under our law and regulations at present, if he makes a discovery in the late November or December, what happens? Within ninety days from the date of filing his claim he must do thirty days' work on that claim. Now, what in actual practice does such a ridiculous requirement mean? It means, Sir, that during the winter months when there is probably four feet of snow on the ground, that poor fellow must go forth with snowshoes on his feet and snow shovel on his shoulder to do practical mining work! After he has built his little hut, and moved his provisions out, he commences trenching in the snow, and the practical result is that he is obliged to spend thirty days in a pretence of doing mining work, when practically all that he has done is washed away by a spring freshet. I say, Sir, that it is an uncalled for hardship to the prospector to ask him to spend a month there, doing work which is of no benefit whatever, and which he might well be allowed to do in the summer months, when his actual trenching would be done, not in the snow, but in the earth, and when he could work intelligently and with some beneficial results. If, Sir, all these discoverers were allowed to do such work in say, August or September, they could then do practical trenching, blasting and drilling if necessary. In fact, Sir, they could go to their work singing the little ditty "Drill, Ye Tarriers, Drill"; but this, under the arbitrary regulations of the present Ministry has been changed into the unwilling chorus, "Shovel, Ye Prospectors, Shovel." In a word, Sir, if we are going to get our fair share of people for the North Country, if we are to get our fair share of the population coming to Canada for our own North Country as against the inducements of the West and the Far West, we must build railroads, and other roads, and make the conditions such as to be inviting to immigrants, and we must be more liberal in our mining and our land regulations. We, Sir, must all along the line be fair and even liberal to the pioneer, whether he be settler, miner or prospector.

Effects on C.P.R. Stocks.

Returning again to the question of Reciprocity, let us follow to their logical conclusion the remarks of the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer.

He says if [illegible] reciprocity agreement is consummated and the duty is taken off our grain, that the grain from the West will go south, and our whole transportation system will be injuriously affected. On the other hand, Conservative newspapers say "Let us stay our hands. The Democrats are likely to get into power, and the duty will be taken off anyway." What difference does it make as to how the duty is taken off once the American duty is taken off? Would the effect on transportation not be the same? Or, is it not better if the duty is to be taken off anyway, that it should be removed as a result of an agreement whereby we get advantages to counterbalance any seeming disadvantages? Hon. in view of the doleful wail of honorable gentlemen opposite as to the effect this agreement will have on our whole transportation system, is it not very peculiar that, since the announcement of the agreement, C.P.R. stocks have run up to the highest figure they have reached in the history of that company? The purchasers of that stock are sane, intelligent business men. If, therefore, the result of the agreement meant destruction to our whole transportation system, of which the Canadian Pacific Railway constitutes a very important part, one would naturally expect that the price of C.P.R. stocks would have greatly declined. As against the vagaries of honorable gentlemen I place the substantial fact that these stocks have greatly advanced in price.

Disloyalty.

When argument fails we have in this House, as elsewhere, the loyalty cry raised, and the fear is expressed that the opening of another market to Canadian goods will mean disintegration of the whole Empire. The honorable member for West Hastings,

AFTER TREATMENT

He was surprised at how the sores healed. "I took your New Method Treatment for a patient suffering with which I had been afflicted for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians, taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicine the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swelling of the glands, pains of the head, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the New Method Treatment for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago [illegible] signs of any disease since. JACK and JILL in FAIRYLAND

1.—When Jack and Jill went up the hill, what do you think they found? Why, the Arabian Nights' carpet, to be sure—the one that would take you anywhere you wanted to go.

"I'll tell you what," said Jack,
"We'll fly round the world 'n back"——

2.—And scarcely had he spoken when off went the old carpet as quick as lightning——

Quicker than an aeroplane with Bleriot,
Or any other mortal thing could ever go.

3.—When suddenly Jack and Jill were turning double somersaults. That old carpet had hit a corner of Bluebeard's palace and——

So Jack slid down one leg,
And Jill slid down the other,

The Tad just stands and watches him and marvels at his art.

closed his speech with an expression of fear "that the obtaining of reciprocal arrangements will certainly lead to distintegration of the Empire." This House might be pardoned in view of the fact that the honorable member's name is Johnson, if his remarks drove honorable members to a recollection of a statement made by the greatest Johnson of the line, namely, that "Loyalty is often the last refuge of a scoundrel." Of course, such a remark would not apply to any honorable gentleman in this House, but the statement is absolutely true, nevertheless. Loyalty is too often dragged in as a cover, or a cloak where argument and reasoning fail. May I be allowed, Sir, to address an "argumentum ad hominem" to the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer? Suppose he has a horse to sell, and a purchaser for the British market offers $200. A purchaser for the American market offers $225. Which will he accept? If that extra $25 is flaunted before his face by the buyer from the American market I venture to say it will be a case of "Now you see it, and now you don't see it." The larger price would be accepted. I desire, Sir, to use this homely illustration to make the point that by accepting the larger price the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer would be a more loyal Britisher than if trade barriers prevented him from receiving the greater price. Canny Scot that he is, he would be better pleased to receive the larger price, and let me say, Sir, that contentment with one's lot and one's environment produces, nay is, twin sister to loyalty, and discontent with conditions, including trade relations, produces disloyalty, nay is, twin sister to disloyalty. If a man is prosperous, if he is satisfied with conditions, including trade relations, if he is satisfied that they give fair play, he will be contented, and if contented he will not only be contented with such conditions and trade relations, but naturally contented with and loyal to the nations flag that guarantees him such. I repeat, Sir, that if trade relations help to make a man's circumstances more prosperous he will be the more loyal. Further then, Sir, in the last analysis, the question of a reciprocal agreement comes down to a straight question of business, pure and simple. If, Sir, trade with our American cousins tended to make Canadians disloyal and to make "Old Glory" float over this whole continent, I wonder, Sir, that we did not long ago become disloyal, and that "Old Glory" is not already flying over Canada. Look at the figures of our trade with the United States. For the year ending March 1st, 1910, we shipped in value seven times as many horses to the United States as we did to Great Britain, of sheep 52 times as many, of poultry about 800 times as many, of eggs twenty per cent. more, of oats a greater quantity, of peas about 60 per cent more, and so on with a large list of produce that might be named. If then, the argument of the honorable gentleman is true, our farmers, nay our dairymen who sent $3,000,000 worth of cream last year, must by this time have their loyalty pretty well tested. It is not fair to any man in Canada, it is an insult to his intelligence to tell him that it will make him disloyal if he follows that law implanted in him by God and nature, which is part of the warp and woof of his very existence, namely, that he has a right to sell in the dearest and buy in the cheapest market. This, Sir, is a law of the human race, and it is an insult to the intelligence of any community or any people to practically tell them they are disloyal if they desire to follow that law. As well at once argue that, if a man ships a horse across the line he must ship his nationality with it. Generally speaking, the parties that are loudest in preaching the doctrine that every man's loyalty will be affected, if allowed to trade with his neighbors, will be found as a matter of fact to be directly, or indirectly, interested in trading with that very neighbor. I have already clearly shown, Sir, that both political parties from time to time since 1866 down to the present date endeavored to make better trade relations with our neighbors to the south of us, and yet, Sir, no truer Britishers were ever in this Dominion than the two leaders of the Government who attempted to secure such trade relations. Sir, when the unbiased historian comes to write the history of Canada, and when through the lapse of time he will have a better perspective, he will give an outstanding place to the Premiers of this Dominion, both of whom sought wider and freer trade relations with the great nation to the south of us, and both of whom were British to the core. The names of two great nation-builders will stand distinctly out, two men, who by different methods and means did much to make a united and contented Canada, two men who sought in a similar way, whose endeavor it was, to obtain larger markets for the produce of the soil, to make a more happy, more prosperous, and a more contented people. These two names are none other than those of the late Rt. Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald and the Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier!

The British Preference.

The tremendous anxiety of honorable gentlemen opposite as to the loyalty of their fellow-Canadians is in strange contrast to the cry that was heard when a preference was granted by the present Liberal Government at Ottawa to British goods entering Canada. Then one heard frequently the statement that there was no "quid pro quo," and occasionally a barking back to the statement "so much the worse for British connection!" But, Sir, every intelligent Canadian knows that nothing else in the history of the Dominion of Canada, nothing else that any Government ever did in Canada, brought this nation out so conspicuously, not only before John Bull himself but before all the nations of Continental Europe. We knew the opinion then expressed by British statesmen, how the newspapers and journals dealt with it; but perhaps, Sir, nothing that has been said or written, so beautifully describes the situation as the words of Rudyard Kipling, when he says:

"A Nation spoke to a Nation,
A Throne sent word to a Throne:
'Daughter am I in my Mother's House,
But Mistress in my Own.
The gates are mine to open,"
(The gates of commerce, if you will),
"The gates are mine to close;
And I abide by my Mother's House,"
Said Our Lady of the Snows."

Honorable gentlemen opposite, who talk loyalty, forget that British Preference remains still intact. If honorable gentlemen opposite urge that now that preference should be increased from 33 1-3 per cent. to say, 50 per cent., I fear they will speedily, and in no unmistakable terms, hear from their manufacturing friends, some of whom, regardless of party, but ever mindful of their own pockets, and properly so, are at present apparently extremely apprehensive as to the loyalty of their neighbors.

Does Trade Follow the Flag?

The old slogan has been sounded in this debate, that "trade follows the flag." That may be true in the experimental stage, when any empire is pursuing a colonization policy; but as applied to the trade of nations generally it is a distinct economic heresy. What constitutes the trade of one country with another? An empire per se does not trade with another empire per se. The individuals of one empire or nation trade with individuals of another empire or nation—so with partnerships, so with companies, corporations; and the sum total of trade between these individuals, partnerships, companies and corporations constitutes what we call the total trade between these two empires or nations. That individual men, partnerships, companies and corporations will sell in the dearest market and buy in the cheapest goes without saying. They do this absolutely regardless of the flag; therefore to say that "the flag rules trade" is simply to give utterance to an economic heresy, that no sane business man believes. Take, Sir, as a striking illustration of the disproof of this economic heresy, the trade between Great Britain and Germany. Everybody knows that for the ten years prior to the year 1909, the last year for which we have returns, that these empires looked somewhat askance at each other. The low, rumbling growl of the British Lion might be heard as he glanced across the Channel and saw the German Eagle plume her wings and sharpen her beak; but, Sir, during those very years there was a steady increase of trade between the two empires, culminating in 1909, the year of the war scare, in the largest figures ever obtained between these two empires. In 1909 German exports to Britain amounted to £56,000,000, while British exports to Germany amounted to £32,000,000. In the same year German exports to the British colonies amounted £12,000,000, while exports of the colonies to Germany amounted to £44,000,000, the grand total being £146,000,000 or $705,000,000, the largest figure ever reached in the history of the two empires. This, Sir, is but one of many striking illustrations that might be given, showing how little the flags have to do with trade. These large figures are arrived at, not on account of the friendliness of the flags, but as a result of the people of both empires following what may be termed the natural instinct of every man, that is, the desire to sell in the dearest and buy in the cheapest markets, utterly regardless of the fact as to whether the flags were friendly or otherwise.

Amendment.

Now, Sir, I desire, by way of amendment, to place our position and that of the Government, in direct contrast, and I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Clark (N. Cumberland):

"That all the words of the motion, after the first word 'That' be struck out and the following be substituted: 'This House regrets that the Financial Statement issued by the Honorable the Provincial Treasurer is inaccurate and misleading, inasmuch as when current receipts and expenditures are classified even as classified by the present Provincial Treasurer in his Financial Statement of 1905, there is a large deficit last year of $531,878.66.

And this House recognizing the fact that our forests are our greatest source of revenue, strongly urges upon the Government the adoption of a proper system of conservation and reforestration, in order that this source of revenue may become perpetual and abiding.

This House further regrets that neither the Honorable the Minister of Education, the Deputy Minister, nor the Superintendent of Education, has any practical knowledge whatever of the condition of our rural schools, and that the result or changes to properly made by this Government has been to increase the cost of education in the rural schools by at least fifty per cent., and to necessitate the employing as teachers in a large percentage of said schools of persons with no qualification whatever, either professional or non-professional.

This House further regrets that this Government, while liberally aiding students in educational courses, that lead to the professions, has taken no practical steps whatever to establish a system of technical and industrial schools throughout the province, in which the mechanic and the artisan may receive training supplementary to his practical training in the workshop.

This House further deplores the fact, that this Government is apparently of the opinion that increased population is of no benefit to this province, and this House strongly recommends the adoption of a vigorous and active colonization scheme for peopling Northern Ontario, and regrets extremely that its settlement has been hitherto retarded by the enforcement of laws and regulations that are oppressive to the pioneer, whether prospector, miner or settler.

This House deplores the growing tendency on the part of members of the Government to introduce Federal issues into our debates, and regrets the organized attempt of Ministers and their supporters to discredit the agreement for better trade relations made between Canada and the United States, which, if consummated, will prove so beneficial to Canada, and especially to the agriculturists."

This amendment was defeated on a straight party vote.

Filling the West.

F. T. Griffin, C.P.R. land commissioner at Winnipeg, states that within the last two years 20,000,000 acres of Government land have been taken up by homestead and pre-emption.

The United Kingdom numbers more trades union members than any other country except Germany.

"THE "DANGER"" CART

Special Vehicle for the Conveying of Bombs, Alleged or Real

Few members of the general public are aware of the method adopted by the Home Office when a bomb, alleged or real, comes into the possession of the London, England, police.

It is generally known that the article under suspicion is at once put into a pail of water, but the after proceedings have, so far, been left to the imagination. Here is what actually happens after a thorough soaking of the object under suspicion is assured.

What is known as the "danger" cart is sent from the Magazine in Hyde Park, where it is kept, to the point where the "bomb" may be, and not many who might chance to see a small hand-cart, painted a brilliant red, being drawn along the street would imagine that it possibly contained an instrument of destruction, which had been intended to blow up some public place or other.

The cart itself is built on two finely-balanced springs, and has suspended underneath it a smaller, box-shaped receptacle in which the suspected article is placed.

The cart and the suspended box are built with the greatest care, so that, no matter how great the jolting may be, the contents of the lower chamber will be in no way disturbed.

The "danger" cart is generally drawn along by two men in plain clothes, whose duty it is to see the cart and its contents safely housed in the laboratory of the Magazine. There the examination by experts takes place.

ON BOARD A LINER

A Captain Dilates on How the Passengers as a Rule Pass the Time

"I suppose that celebrities crossing the Atlantic are subjected to a good deal of impertinent scrutiny and ibnlzing," said a man to the captain of an Atlantic liner recently during the course of a conversation concerning life aboard the huge greyhounds which carry thousands of passengers to and from North America every year.

"Not necessarily," was the reply. "As a matter of fact, the first-class passengers may be as exclusive in regard to other folk as if he or she were at home. In the old days, of course, the cabins and saloons on liners were so small and stuffy that passengers spent a lot of their time on deck, with the result that most of them became acquainted with each other on the voyage. Nowadays, however, deck suites of rooms, which include a parlor and a bath-room, are so airy that one can get along very comfortably without goin gon deck at all."

"But isn't it usual for passengers to sit about in deck-chairs to enjoy the fresh air?"

"Well, the habit is not quite so popular as many people imagine. There is plenty of ozone in any of the deck cabins, and, as I heard a passenger say on one occasion, the spectacle of men and women spread out asleep with their mouths open is not exactly picturesque. After dinner in the evening passengers will promenade the deck for a while, but fashionable folk seldom show themselves on deck except for this walk. They amuse themselves in their own cabins or play bridge in the private rooms."

THE "SILENT ADMIRAL"

Sir Arthur Wilson Has Entered the Navy Controversy

For the first time in his life Sir Arthur K. Wilson, First Sea Lord and chief expert adviser to the Admiralty, has entered into the public controversy regarding the strength of the Navy. A man who prefers deeds to words, "Tug" Wilson, as he is popularly termed in the Service, is recognized as being without equal as a strategist and tactician. He is one of the very few naval officers who have earned the coveted V.C. This was at the Battle of El Teb in 1884, when the Arabs broke the square formed by the Naval Brigade, and he sprang into the breach and engaged the enemy with his bare fists, having broken his sword. Sir Redvers Buller described the act as "one of the most courageous he had ever witnessed." Sir Arthur is known in the Navy as "the man who never takes a holiday," for he rarely goes ashore, even when his fleet or flagship visits any port. He regards every moment spent away from the Service as wasted.

TO EXPRESS HIS SORROW

An advertisement in the London "Express":—"To the motorist who killed a little Pomeranian dog in Green Lanes on Sunday morning last.—If he desires to express his sorrow in a practical manner, let him send the purchase price, $35, to the Children's Fund."

What tree is of great use to history?—The palm.

Could Not Rest at Night.

Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

Heed the warning: cure the weak, lame, aching back and dispose of any chances of further trouble.

If you don't do this, serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Puigh, Parkdale, Man., writes:—"I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them and I am not the same weak woman I was before. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

HOW TO GET FREE

A 50c. BOTTLE OF PSYCHINE

(PRONOUNCED SI-KEEN)

The white corpuscles of the blood—the Phagocytes, as they are known scientifically—are the policemen or the scavengers of the body.

Not a germ of disease can invade the body anywhere but these white corpuscles get after it. And, if they are strong enough or in sufficient numbers, they devour it.

If they're not strong enough or in sufficient numbers, then the invading army of disease germs triumphs and disease holds the body.

Any preparation that strengthens these white corpuscles or that increases their number, will not only preserve health, but will build up its defences so strongly that contagion or infection are impossible.

Herbs have always been great curative agents from time immemorial.

They have been styled nature's own remedies.

Certain herbs more than others are noted for their curative powers.

And it has been found that those herbs that are most effective in maintaining or restoring health, do so by building up the white corpuscles or Phagocytes.

These herbs are incorporated in Psychine.

And it is the tremendous curative power of these herbs that is responsible for the unequalled record of this splendid preparation.

Think of it. In Psychine we have a preparation that has been in use a third of a century. That has cured hundreds of thousands of many kinds of diseases.

For which we have received hundreds of thousands of unsolicited testimonials.

Here are the diseases for the treatment of which Psychine is indicated:

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Bronchitis	Weak Lungs
Hemorrhages	Weak Voice
Sore Throat	Spring Weakness
Anaemia	Early Decline
Female Weakness	Catarrhal Affections
Indigestion	Catarrh of Stomach
Poor Appetite	Night Sweats
Chills and Fevers	Obstinate Coughs
Sleeplessness and Nervous Troubles	Laryngitis and Dyspepsia

After-effects of Pleurisy, Pneumonia and La-Grippe.

Now we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effect of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us and we'll give your druggist an order (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

A confidence that has been based on our third of a century's experience with this splendid preparation with a full knowledge of the hundreds of thousands of cures it has made.

and "farmers" as the manufacturers alone, or for any one class, but for the manufacturers and farmers and for all the classes which compose our nation." (Hear, hear.)

"I now come," said Sir Wilfrid, "to the last of the objections raised against us. Hon. gentlemen opposite find within the four corners of this agreement the latent, the incipient destruction of our industries, but it is still more difficult to find therein the fatal germ which is to dissolve our autonomy and finally land us in the American republic.

"Was there ever, in any land at any time, a reform proposed which was not immediately denounced as revolutionary by the forces of reaction? With this logic we have been particularly familiar in this country ever since the first days of responsible Government.

"There was at one time an annexation movement in this country and it received its first check when Lord Elgin brought back from Washington the reciprocity treaty of 1854. From that day to this the desire of annexation had dwindled until there was not a vestige of it left.

"To the Canadian people I would say," declared Sir Wilfrid, in conclusion, "that if it is possible for us to obtain such relations between these two young and growing nations, Canada will have rendered to old England, the mother of nations, say to the whole British Empire, a service unequalled in its present effect, and still more in its far-reaching consequences."

Major John Currie (North Simcoe) made a brief but spirited reply. On Wednesday Mr. Borden's motion for delay, pending action by the United States Congress, will be debated.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

British trade continues to show remarkable increase.

The United States Government have ordered a mobilization of army and navy.

Prince Adalbert, third son of the Kaiser, is ill with appendicitis. The attack is described as a light one.

The Carter-Aldinger Co. of Winnipeg has been awarded the contract for the new Manitoba Agricultural College, their bid being $350,000.

Hon. James Bryce, British ambassador at Washington, is coming to Ottawa. He will be the guest of Earl Grey at Government House.

The proximity of the U. S. military and naval forces to Mexico has given rise to sensational rumors regarding affairs in the latter country.

The Anglo-Japanese tariff negotiations have been concluded. The settlement arrived at is understood to be satisfactory to British trading interests.

The conference between C.P.R. officials and the company's conductors and trainmen in Winnipeg yesterday ended with the men satisfied with a ten per cent. increase.

Active work was begun yesterday by the newly-formed anti-reciprocity league, when a score or more of canvassers began to seek out names for a big petition to be presented to Parliament.

While two brothers by the name of McKay were working in a gravel pit at Victoria Harbor, the bank of the pit caved in, burying one of them under a ton of gravel. He was dug out, but died a few minutes later.

Albert Menard, aged 10, was playing with several companions yesterday in St. Denis street, Montreal, when a rope he had attached to his waist caught in the shoe brake of a passing street car, which jerked him down under the car. He was crushed to death.

Four Died In One Family.

Toronto, March 8.—With the death of James Monkhouse, 20 Olive street, on Monday, occurred the fourth death in the family of Samuel Monkhouse. Ever since May 20 last, when William Monkhouse, a son of 25 years of age, passed away, the grim spectre seems to have dogged the family. On July 17 his young sister, 6 years of age, was burned to death while playing with matches; in September another daughter, Mrs. Harry Wilson, passed away, after a brief nine months of wedded life. Shortly after her death, another son, Norman, was stricken with pneumonia, and since that time has been hovering between life and death. After Norman was taken down, James became infirm and gradually got worse, until his death occurred on Monday. Norman is still in a precarious condition.

Plead Not Guilty.

Three Rivers, Que., March 8.—Charged with the murder of Maurice Plouffe, to which, according to the detectives, he has already confessed, Narcisse Trepanier yesterday pleaded not guilty. He was sent back to jail until Saturday morning.

A Working Agreement.

Whitby, March 8.—An agreement was approved of at yesterday afternoon's meeting of the council, whereby the Markham and Pickering Telephone Co. is given a five-year contract to operate a telephone exchange in the town, paying $60 a year for three years, and then give six free phones.

The agreement is not favored by a large portion of the business community, who wanted the independent company and the Bell Telephone Co. to erect a working connection of their lines so that Whitby would have access to the neighboring towns without a double charge.

Hanged Himself In Cell.

Kingston, March 8.—Just after a guard passed his cell, Charles Goldsmith, aged 35, pulled off his shirt and making it into a long strip, hanged himself. The guard, returning, found him hanging two feet from the floor from his cell door, dead. Goldsmith was sentenced from near London for a murderous assault on a woman, being given twenty-one years and had served fourteen. He acted very strangely at times, and is believed to have been of unsound mind.

German Bank Collapses.

Frankfort-on-the-Oder, Germany, March 8.—The Vereins Bank, which, after experiencing a run, suspended on Nov. 28, was declared bankrupt yesterday. The losses are estimated at $1,000,000, and they involve the total capital of $600,000 and from 50 to 60 per cent. of the deposits, which amounted to $1,200,000 when the run began.

It is stated that the bank invested too heavily in the mortgages of land companies.

Fell Through Hatchway.

Barrie, March 8.—William King, chief engineer of the steamer Ionic, of the Northern Navigation Co., who has been working fitting out his boat for the coming season, had to cross the steamers Laronic and Huronic to reach her, when he fell through the hatchway of the Huronic, all but about two feet square of which was covered up, 18 or 20 feet to the steel floor of the hold.

He was last seen on Monday morning about 11 o'clock, and when he failed to turn up, searchers found his body about 3 p.m. yesterday.

King, who was 50 years of age, leaves a wife and three children.

Scored Win Over G.T.R.

New Haven, Conn., March 8.—Parties in the interest of the Vermont Valley Railway Co., a corporation of the State of Vermont, have purchased the interests of the Zollwell estate in the Montpelier and Wells River Railway and the Barre Railway. The properties will be merged into and become a part of the Boston and Maine Railway system.

The announcement discloses a new step taken by the New Haven Co. in its contest against the Grand Trunk. It is understood to have been a valuable feeder to the G.T.R. system, particularly in connection with the Barre quarries.

Approved Basis of Union.

Kingston, March 8.—After a three hours' discussion Kingston presbytery, by a vote of 24 to 14 approved of the proposed basis of church union, as recommended by the general assembly. The presbytery placed itself on record as being in favor of higher salaries for students engaged in mission...

PETERBOROUGH WEDNESDAY MARCH 8 1911

THE SEAT SALE FOR THE "THREE TWINS" OPENS ON FRIDAY MORNING, MAR. 10

HOW WILLIE FAUX OF PETERBOROUGH SECURED A VALUABLE HOMESTEAD

Graphic Story of His Successful Week's Wait at Door of Dominion Land Office, to Which the Examiner Has Already Referred.

WON A RICH PLUM

A short time ago the Examiner published an extract from a Calgary paper stating that Willie Faux, formerly of Peterborough had determined to wait all week on the steps of the Dominion Land office in order to secure the titles to a valuable homestead. Mr. Faux is a son of Mr. John Faux of Rubidge Street and his friends will be glad to learn that he succeeded, as the following from the Calgary Herald shows:—

With his heart beating a tattoo and his wern, unshaven face lighted up with the supremacy of his happiness, young Bill Faux walked down the stairs from the Dominion land office this morning with his chin in the air and his chest expanded to its limit. At the door he met his wife face to face. His wife was radiant. Bill slapped her on the back, thrust his hand into an inner pocket and pulled out two sheets of crumpled parchment. There was the coat-of-arms of the Dominion of Canada on the top of each sheet. They were certificates entitling Bill to "N.W. 23, tp. 31, range 25, west of 4."

In other words these two documents gave him settler's rights for 160 acres of the most fertile land in God's green earth, located some four miles and a half from Three Hills, Alta.

WE'RE WINNERS

"Bill, you and I are winners," said the wife after she had carefully inspected the papers. "Oh, I knew we would win out," returned Bill.

Then the happiest pair of young folks that ever started out to make good in the history of the west, walked away in most affectionate style to a hotel, where Mrs. Faux had a square meal waiting out for her good spouse.

"Yes, I have the land now," said Bill after breakfast. "But, we had to fight for it."

"How long did you wait at the land office?" he was asked.

"Well, since Monday afternoon."

"How much sleep have you had since that time?"

"About eight hours all told."

Mr. and Mrs. Faux will leave Calgary this afternoon for Three Hills, where they will begin homesteading duties.

OUTWITTED LAND AGENTS

In spite of the fact that the land agents gave orders that homesteadseekers would have to keep away from the entrance to the office until 10 o'clock last night, Faux, with unusual shrewdness, remained near the door from early yesterday afternoon.

William Preston and his son, from Three Hills, who fought with the Fauxes early yesterday morning in an attempt to gain first place at the door latch so that they might cinch the land Faux secured to-day, haunted the postoffice building where the land agent is located throughout the afternoon.

All the doors closed at 10 o'clock last night. At that hour the man who was on the stoop at the land office entrance first would have first entrance to file.

PRESTONS FOOLED

The Prestons stationed themselves inside the precious goal in the postoffice corridor. They figured that when the janitor would kick the place for the night they would be in a position to watch him on his rounds, and when he started for the land office door they would reach there first, open it and gain the outside and a position just as near to the brass knob as the laws of physics would allow.

They were wrong in their calculations. The last man out of the land office left at 9:30. He pushed a catch in the automatic lock and when he had passed through, the big panel swung closed and bolted itself.

When 10 o'clock came they made a dash for the door. At the same moment, Faux, from the outside, started for the stoop.

The Prestons found that three inches of Government oak stood between them and fresh air. This was discovered at about the same moment that young Faux, cheered on by a great crowd that had gathered in the streets, mounted to the stoop and seized the knob.

Finding the janitor, the Prestons were ushered out of the building.

Faux's wife joined him on the stoop and there they stood all night. William Preston and his son had lost where the crowd of landseekers were stationed and took up their positions at the end of the line.

At 7 this morning the entrance was again flung open. There was a mad race up the stairs. The inner door was reached first by Faux.

At 9 o'clock the strange line moved into the land agent's office.

There, William Faux paid over the necessary fee and secured his papers on the prize homestead. And as he seized the pen, Preston and his son,

CONSPIRACY CHARGE AGAINST MR. STRATTON IS DISMISSED

Magistrate Denison Says That There is No Evidence Whatever Against Mr. Stratton

Tuesday was occupied all day in receiving evidence against Mr. M. Wilson, K.C., solicitor for The Trusts and Guarantee Company, Ltd., Mr. J. J. Warren, General Manager, Mr. W.S Morden, Assist. General Manager, and Mr. J. R. Stratton, President of the Company, on the charge of conspiracy in receiving an undue preference for The Trusts Company in accepting Farmers' Bank Bills as a lodge or security for monies loaned to the Bank.

The first witness called was Inspector Duncan, who produced the books of the Bank and extracts from the books of the Company, and the correspondence that had taken place between them.

Mr. Howard, Accountant for The Trusts Company, was called by the Crown and showed that The Farmers' Bank made regular deposits with the Compan yin the ordinary course of business and that whilst their deposits were larger, they were not different from that of any other Company. He said that Mr. Stratton was not aware, to his knowledge, of any of the deposits that The Farmers' Bank had made with the Company.

Mr. Renshaw, Manager of the Toronto Branch of The Farmers' Bank, stated that the deposits were made in the usual way and cheques were drawn against the account as required.

The Magistrate, after hearing all the evidence, said "There is no evidence whatever against Mr. Stratton and the charge against him must be dismissed."

With regard to the charges against Mr. Wilson, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Morden, he thought there was some evidence to justify him in sending the case to the Grand Jury, although, if he were trying the case himself his decision would be different.

All the witnesses testified that Mr. Stratton was entirely innocent in regard of any of the transactions.

Mr. R. R. Hall appeared as counsel for Mr Stratton. Mr. W. N. Tilley appeared for Mr. Morden, and Mr. Wilson appeared for himself and Mr. Warren.

HAREM SKIRT MAKES ITS APPEARANCE HERE

Famous Garb Not However Likely to be Worn on the Street—Is Not Much in Demand.

AT T. C. ELLIOT'S

The inevitable has happened! Peterborough has at last been invaded by the "Jupe Culotte" or more commonly known by the name of the Harem skirt, and until some member of the fair sex who possesses the necessary nerve and endurance comes forward with the intention of decorating her figure with the above, we shall have to curtail our curiosity to the limits of an exhibition view of this so-called monstrosity in Mr T. C. Elliot's dry goods establishment on George street.

The divided skirt, which is now on view in Mr. Elliot's store, is a slightly modified form of the Harem skirt which has caused so much comment in Paris and London. It is in the form of a bloomer style, divided in the centre, the division being connected with a strip of cloth about eight inches wide and extending to the bottom of the skirt. Mr. Elliot does not intend to stock them unless the demand for the skirts warrant such action.

Another new style which Mr. Elliot has stocked for his spring trade is one in which the originator has reverted to the French revolution period to furnish a basis for this new feature. It is known as the Charlotte Corday.

The women's dress of the time is familiar to most of us through the portraits of the period and especially those of Charlotte Corney, perhaps the most picturesque heroine of that terrible epoch. The little barques, or short tunics and other features of simple character have been borrowed freely by the leading Paris makers and furnish a dominant note for the new spring costumes of this kind.

Are Against The Treaty

Special to The Examiner.

BARRIE, MARCH 8.—A resolution condemnatory to the Reciprocity Treaty, because, it was claimed, it was needlessly involving Canada in closer relations with the States and weakening the ties of the Empire, was passed unanimously by the Grand Black Chapter of Ontario West at the meeting here to-day. A resolution was also adopted urging the immediate abolition of bilingualism in the primary schools of Ontario.

Are To Adopt Blockade Methods

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, MARCH 8.—This afternoon the Reciprocity debate in the House of Commons will take new form, when Leader Borden will probably move that the resolution be deferred until after the United States has ratified the agreement. It is thought Mr. Fielding will answer this with the assertion that the Canadian Government is bound to carry out its part of the agreement, no matter what action is taken at Washington. The vote on this may be reached to-night, but if voted down there will be other resolutions of like import presented by the Opposition, who have evidently determined to fight the bill by all methods known to Parliamentary usage.

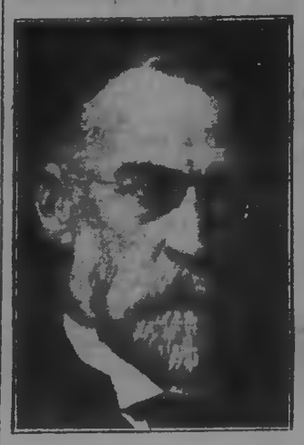
LIBRARY CONVENTION TO BE HELD TO-MORROW INTERESTING PROGRAMME

Public is Cordially Invited to the Sessions in the New Public Library---Some Splendid Addresses Will be Given by Distinguished Speakers.

A meeting which should be of the greatest interest to all and which will show the splendid work that is being accomplished by the Ontario Library Association, will be that which is to be held in the Public Library Building on Thursday next beginning at 10 a.m. Apart from the fact that the speakers and readers of addresses for the occasion are persons well versed in the subjects which they are to treat and that therefore a large amount of valuable information is certain to be forthcoming there is another reason why the people of Peterborough should avail themselves of the opportunity to be present at the various meetings. We not only possess in the Library a building second to none in the province as regards equipment but we have a library board that it is safe to say is composed of as public spirited a body of men as can be found anywhere. It would be a compliment which they would, we are sure, appreciate to the full, to have the meetings as generously patronised as possible so that the visitors from a distance may take away with them pleasant impressions of their stay in Peterborough. Mr. J. H. Burnham who will be acting President in the unavoidable absence of Dr. Vrooman of Lindsay, will give an address on "The Library and the People" and other addresses will be given by well known officials of the Library Institute and local speakers. All the meetings are absolutely free to the public. There is no charge whatever.

ENJOYABLE DEBATE AT ST. ALPHONSUS LYCEUM



MR. E. H. D. HALL,
Chairman of the Public Library Board

St. Martin's T. A. S., of Ennismore and Representatives of St. Peter's T. A. S. Discussed College Education.

SPLENDID PROGRAMME

It is a matter of regret that a larger aggregation of people did not turn out to hear the splendid debate between Ennismore and Peterborough at the local T. A. S. rooms last night. The subject of the debate was resolved "That a College Education is not Requisite for a Young Man." Great credit is due the contestants for the high intellectual basis on which the debate was conducted. A pleasing and prominent feature of the debate was the excellent oratorical abilities of the debaters.

Rev. Father McColl occupied the chair, the meeting being opened by a short musical programme, which consisted of the following numbers:

Instrumental selection by Mr. McKinstry, which was well rendered.

Solo, by Mr. Lee, which was heartily encored and responded to by Mr. Lee.

Last, but not least, was a duet by Messrs. New and Lee, which was exceptionally well rendered.

The services of Dr. McPherson was secured as judge, the verdict being based on a 60 per cent. basis for arguments and 40 per cent. for oratory. The line-up for the affirmative were Mr. James Dorris and Vincent McCabe, for the negative, Mr. John Collins and Mr. Donohue, the latter position being occupied by the Ennismore braves.

Mr. Dorris, for the affirmative, was the first speaker called upon. In his opening remarks Mr. Dorris inferred that education is learning to do things, rather than having to do them. Real education is, therefore, always practical. The majority of young men have no college education. It is beyond the reach of the ordinary young man's finances. Success in this advanced age, is measured in dollars and cents, and the luxuries that go with it. Business is king: if college men could get rid of the view that business was below their calling they would advance more rapidly. If we were all college trained young men the world would become stagnant. Russell Sage had only a common school education. He entered a grocery store when fifteen years of age, at a princely salary of $4.00 per month and board. When he died he had an income of $15.00 per minute. Chas. M. Hayes, General Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, never had more than a public school education. He started as water boy on the same system, and he is now earning more money than any college trained man or engineer in the service of the Grand Trunk to-day. A man's talents are never thoroughly developed until he is thrown upon his own resources. A college course has been the cause of the downfall of men, and is a physical strain upon those undertaking it. The speaker suggested that should a man so desire to take a college training, that he first go and learn a trade thereby gaining a practical experience preparatory to learning the theory.

Mr. John Collins replied for the negative. He referred to the ability displayed by the former speaker. In his opinion, a man without a college education is like a house without a chimney. J. J. Hill, the Great Northern magnate, also Chas. M. Hayes, have college trained men under them, and it is necessary for men to have a thorough college training in order to carry out the business precepts laid over by such men as heretofore mentioned. The chief reason why there are not more college trained men was attributed to the fin-

Nothing to Connect Mr. Stratton With the Conspiracy Charges in the Farmers' Bank Case

WAS DISMISSED

TORONTO, MARCH 8.—The last of the so-called Farmers' Bank cases were put through the preliminary stages yesterday before Police Magistrate Denison, with the result that Messrs. J. J. Warren and W. S. Morden go for trial on the charge of hypothecating Farmers' Bank notes, while Mr. J. R. Stratton, charged in the same connection, is acquitted. The additional charge against Messrs. Morden and Matthew Wilson of conspiring with W. R. Travers to give undue preference to the Trusts & Guarantee Company stands for a week pending the submission of authorities on the question of law. The Magistrate said that while it was quite clear that undue preference had been given to the Trusts & Guarantee Company to the detriment of other creditors of the bank, he could not see where any persons besides Travers were legally responsible for that transaction. Mr. J. W. Seymour Corley, K. C., could not enlighten the court to any extent on that point, and time will be taken to search the code.

It could not be discovered that the act of conspiring to induce Travers to carry out the transaction was an illegal act.

All the defendants were in court with the exception of J. J. Warren, who is absent in British Columbia on private business. He was represented by Mr. Matthew Wilson, K. C. Mr. J. R. Stratton was present, attended by his counsel, Mr. R. R. Hall, of Peterborough. Mr. Morden was represented by Mr. W. N. Tilley, K.C., and Mr. T. C. Robinette, K.C., watched the proceedings in the interest of the Trusts & Guarantee Company.

Last Days of the Bank.

The transactions under investigation were carried out in the dying days of the bank, when the securing of legal tender to effect their clearance at the Toronto clearing house was a matter of apparent difficulty for the managers of the Bank. Advances were obtained from the Trusts & Guarantee Company chiefly during the months of June, July and August of last year. It was charged that Mr. J. R. Stratton, President of the Trusts Company; Mr. J. J. Warren, General Manager, and Mr. W. S. Morden, Assistant General Manager, received in hypothecation notes of the Farmers' Bank in return for advances made to meet these clearing house obligations.

Mr. Travers on the Stand.

Mr. Travers was the first witness called. He said an arrangement had been made with the Trusts company whereby the bank would receive funds from them from time to time as they required them, to meet clearing house obligations. The bank had opened an account with the Trusts company and it was the practice to make deposits of Farmers' Bank notes and occasionally foreign drafts in return for which they received the company's check, which could be utilized anywhere.

It was the understanding he said that the Trusts company would hold those notes until the bank was able to take them up. The idea was to keep them out of circulation. In course of time the Trusts company accumulated some $50,000 of these Farmers Bank notes.

Kept Bank Afloat.

Mr. V. R. Burke, an ex-accountant of the Toronto branch of the Farmers Bank, when asked why the trusts company had accepted the notes in return for their own good money, replied: "Well, if they had not accepted them they would have had to give a loan."

"Why would they?" asked the Magistrate.

"Because it was in their interests to keep the bank afloat."

After some further examination Mr. Corley said that that was his case.

"If that is your case," commented his Worship, "it is not shown that Mr. Stratton is in it."

"Not in any way," put in Mr. Corley.

Mr. Stratton Acquitted.

Not in any way," re-echoed the Magistrate. Continuing, he said: "Now with reference to Warren and Morden it looks to me as if notes of the Farmers Bank were placed with the Trusts & Guarantee Company in return for money and I think the charges against them should go to the higher court. There was another charge against Mr. Morden in the same connection, but this was withdrawn.

The conspiracy charge, which was

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8, 1911

SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

"If my poor voice could be heard throughout the length and breadth of this country, and if, without any presumption, it could be heard also beyond the frontier, I would say to our American neighbours that, flattering as it may be to their pride, the idea that the territory of the Republic should extend over the whole continent, from the waters of the Gulf of Mexico to the waters of the Arctic Ocean is an impractical dream. Remember that we Canadians were born under the same flag as were your ancestors, a flag under which, perhaps, they may have suffered some oppression, but which to us has been, and is now more than ever, the emblem of freedom. Remember that if you have founded a nation upon a separation from the motherland, we Canadians have set our hearts upon building up a nation without separation; that in this task we are already far advanced, with our institutions, with our national entity as a people, and with everything that constitutes a nation, to whom we are just as devoted as you are to yours. Remember that the blood which flows in our veins is as good, just as good, as your own, and that if you are a proud people, though we have not your numbers, we are just as proud as you are, and that rather than part with our national existence we would part with our lives." Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the House of Commons.

A PROFITABLE PARTNERSHIP.

A father, with a view to encouraging his young daughter, aged 20, to purchase a Canadian Government Annuity, so that she may have an absolutely sure income of $300 a year so long as she may live from and after the age of 55, offered to contribute $25 a year for this purpose if she would, from her earnings, contribute the balance of the annual premium necessary to secure the said Annuity, an offer which the daughter readily accepted on ascertaining how small an amount she would be required to pay. She found that by a saving of $2.27 a month, in addition to the $25 a year, or $2.08 a month) to be paid by her father, the Annuity of $300 would not only be secured, but that it would be paid for ten years in any event, so that should she die before the ten years expired the Annuity would be continued for the remainder of the term to such person as she might name, thus insuring a positive return of $3,000, but, as has been said, with the proviso that should she survive the 10 years the Annuity would be continued to herself so long as she might live. Should death occur before 55 all that had been paid in, with 3 per cent compound interest, would go to her heirs. It is certainly a most attractive investment, and other fathers or mothers desiring to set so excellent an example to their children of any ages, may ascertain full information on the subject by applying to their Postmaster, or direct to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom all letters go free of postage.

PREJUDGING THE CASE.

It is the habit of the Conservative press, to regard a charge against a Liberal government or a Liberal member of Parliament, and guilt, as synonymous terms. For their purpose the trvial matter of proof is a superfluity. This is illustrated in the case of the charges brought by Mr. P. E. Blondin, the Conservative-Nationalist member for Champlain, against Mr. A. Lanctot, M. P., Richelieu. The charge is that the latter took improper liberties in converting government materials and labour of government employees to his personal use. Mr. Lanctot denies the correctness of the charge and challenges the most thorough investigation, an attitude that, taken by itself, is not an overwhelming proof of guilt, and the investigation is now going on. Yet some of the Conservative journals of the baser sort have already condemned Mr. Lanctot. The investigation will show whether or not Mr. Lanctot is guilty. If guilty he deserves exemplary punishment, which will include the loss of his seat. His accuser makes the charge on his responsibility, as a member of Parliament, and is in honour bound to vacate his seat if he fails to prove his charges. But his Conservative journalistic friends have already confirmed him in his seat; for they have, with the vicious prescience of partizanship, condemned Mr. Lanctot in advance.

CREATING THE IDEA.

Premier Whitney promises—threatens would be a more fitting word—to introduce into the Ontario Legislature a resolution, to be passed by his subservient majority, declaring that Canada is heading for annexation to the United States. This is one of the most unpatriotic and disloyal actions imaginable. Premier Whitney knows and every member of the Legislature who will vote for his shameful resolution, knows that there is no annexation sentiment in Canada and that there is no more danger than desire for such an act of national obliteration. The only suggestion of annexation comes from the party that while claiming a monopoly of loyalty to Great Britain, is the only party that advocates a prohibitive tariff against British goods coming into Canada. They seem to argue that if tariff hostility to Great Britain fosters sentiments of loyalty and tightens the bonds of Empire, a similar tariff wall against the United States is necessary to keep Canadian loyalty from escaping. All the talk of annexation comes either from United States tariff twisters, or Canada flag-floppers. That the Yankee exploiters of annexation do not represent representative sentiment, that freer trade with the United States is not held to connote annexation, is shown by the fact that the United States senate "turns down" reciprocity. Great Britain doesn't know of any annexation sentiment in Canada, except through the brawlings of irresponsible politicians and newspapers. But when Premier Whitney prostitutes the functions of the representative body of the greatest province in the Dominion to declare for annexation, then the Mother country may be led into the unfounded belief that there is some annexationist sentiment in Canada. As the Conservative annexationists of 1849 were the pessimists of their day, so the Conservative annexationists of 1911 are the pessimists of to-day; and a Canadian pessimist is about as useful and desirable as a Canadian thistle.

A SUCCESSFUL COMPANY.

In another column will be found the annual financial statement of the Mutual Life of Canada. At the annual meeting of the policy-holders of this company recently held, a most gratifying report was presented by the directors.

The Company's assurance in force has reached almost $65,000,000.00 and there has, during the past year, been an increase in the assets of one and three-quarter million. The new business written during the year amounted to nearly nine and one-half million showing a very substantial increase over the previous years.

There has been a decrease in the death losses, an increase in the rate of interest on investments, and an exceedingly low expense rate.

This company has always been economically managed, its funds invested in substantial securities, and the interests of the policy holders in general appear to have been extremely well safeguarded.

With the splendid showing that the Company has to its credit it should make even more rapid progress in the future than in the past.

GOOD ALL ROUND.

(Toronto Star)

The arrangement will be as good for the consumer as for the farmer. The consumer will be able to range over a territory twice as large as Europe and containing a greater variety of soil and climate for his food. What he cannot obtain in one part of Canada or the United States he can find in another. A fruit or vegetable which is at its best in New York State at one time of the year it is at its best in Ontario at another time of the year. The reciprocity agreement gives the consumer the benefit of a variety of seasons as well as a variety of soils. To-day the fruits and vegetables "out of season" are luxuries for the rich. The reciprocity will give to the poor the liberty that is now enjoyed by the rich, of eating fresh fruits and vegetables, during many months of the year, instead of during a few months.

The reciprocity agreement may cut down the profits of the middle-man—the railway, the packer, the man who holds eggs and fruits in cold storage buying them from the farmer while they are abundant, and doling them out to the rich when they are scarce. But it will benefit the toiler who grows the food and the toiler who grows the food and the toiler who eats the food.

PARTIZAN DISCUSSION OF RECIPROCITY.

(Christian Guardian)

It does seem exceedingly regretable that the discussion of this most important and far-reaching matter should have settled down in Canada to the purely party point of view. The question was one that ought to have the most careful and the most intelligent investigation. We do not think that anyone can say off-hand what it will mean to the future industrial commercial and national life of Canada if the treaty goes into effect. We ought to give the most unprejudiced and most painstaking study to the whole question, and instead we have got down dangerously near to the mere party squabble over it. The foul utterances of Champ Clark congressman for Missouri, have perhaps done more to prejudice the case for reciprocity in Canada than anything else that could have been said or done. It seems difficult to believe that are men with intelligence enough to warrant their election in the position he holds who would talk such stuff and mean it, so that it seems more charitable to think that he had a definite purpose of injuring the prospects of the treaty in Canada in speaking as he did. As it seems to us, the thought that reciprocity would be a menace to the British connection is very largely fanciful.

"SCREAMS" DYING OUT.

(Montreal Witness)

"The further the pendulum of prejudice swings one way, the further inevitably it will swing the other. If an historical charcter is blackened enough in one generation, be sure that some other generation will try to change or vary the disagreeable sooty colour with one coat or more of moral whitewash or kalsomine. This suggests that the day cannot be very far off when journalistic screaming will no longer be fashionable, because it will no longer pay. Men have given up the vile habit of "swearing" before now for the same reason. A "round oath" too often repeated ceases to interest or alarm and only leaves disgust. The most perverse musical taste tires in time of the loudest gramaphone; and of that more blatant instrument, the calliope, but which circus managers now seem of have abandoned.

"As sure as night follows day, the front page screams, the simulated agony, of yellow newspapers concerning innocent and beneficent reciprocity proceedings will fail to interest even the most unsophisticated, except to disgust them; and all the wild absurdities which are now being told about annexation will recoil upon the author's head," and Premier Whitney's hysterical resolution as to annexation will join in the limbo of oblivion.

Many young ladies who were supposed to be going into decline have been restored to health and vigour by the use of Miller's Compound Iron Pills. Wm. Madill, druggist.

Prominent Local Conservative Who Favours The Trade Agreement

To the Editor of The Globe: In your report of a meeting of the Conservative party of the East Riding of Peterborough my name is mentioned as speaking in favour of reciprocity. In this connection I have to say that to me it would have been a loss of self-respect had I allowed a motion to pass condemning the reciprocity agreement without making it clear to the meeting that for this once in thirty years I was not in complete accord with my party leaders and a large majority of my Conservative friends, and for a number of reasons, of which I will only mention a few at this writing: First, the question is not essentially a party one, but a straight business proposition. Second, that being so, it is inconceivable to me how the two great political parties can almost split even on the question. One could imagine two or more men differing, but how the two parties at Ottawa can be diametrically opposed to each other can only be accounted for by pure and unadulterated party feeling, and the disposition to follow the leader, like the proverbial "flock of sheep." Third, while admitting that the new agreement, or any agreement that could be made, will not satisfy every producer or every consumer, I am convinced that it will be acceptable and beneficial to the country as a whole, and that the fact of our increasing our trade from three hundred millions to over five hundred millions will not make for disloyalty or annexation. It cannot be otherwise. There is no such sentiment now in this fair Dominion, and we have been trading with the tricky Yankee to the tune of over three hundred millions per annum. I say that the Conservative party are not honest in this disloyalty and annexation cry, and to use the somewhat inelegant though very expressive words of one of our big and respected Canadians: this annexation-loyalty cry makes me sick and ashamed.

GREAT INTEREST IN TO-NIGHT'S BIG HOCKEY BATTLE AT BROCK ST. RINK

Harvey Sproule's Senior O. H. A. All Stars Will be Here for a Game With the Peterborough Intermediates.

ICE WILL BE FAST

The only thing that was needed to make to-night's game between the Senior O. H. A. stars and the Peterborough Intermediates, the best contest of the season, has been supplied by the weatherman, in the shape of an excellent sheet of hard ice. The contest should be well worth seeing and will attract a big crowd of fans. The announcement of the line-up of Harvey Sproule's selects has aroused considerable interest, as it is one of the strongest and most representative sevens that could be picked in Toronto. Holmes, who will play goal, belongs to the Parkdale Canoe Club and is considered the best goal-keeper in the Senior O. H. A., Brickers, McLaren and Company notwithstanding. Murphy, the point player, is captain of the Argos, and has been the sensation of the season. He is the best defence player in Toronto, and a wonderful rusher as well. Jakie Moore of the Argos, who will play cover, needs no introduction here. He is an old Peterborough boy, and is said to be going faster now than at any time in his hockey career. McLean, the rover, is the star of the Toronto Rowing Club and played for Parkdale last season. Meekin is the star centre of the Eaton team, and hails from Barrie. Kennedy, who will play right wing, used to play rugby in Peterborough and was a member of the Varsity Canadian champions. In hockey he plays with the Varsity Intercollegiate title holders. "Kurnel" Ridpath, the left wing, is one of the stars of the Parkdale team, and a brother of Bruce Ridpath of the Ottawas.

Peterborough will have the same line-up as defeated T. A. A. C. and are confident of making the Senior Stars travel all the way. The game will not start until 8.30 o'clock with the teams as follows:

"THREE TWINS" WILL BE THEATRICAL TREAT OF SEASON

What is promised as the real theatrical treat of the season is the forthcoming engagement of Jos. M. Gaites musical comedy "Three Twins," with Clifton Crawford and the original New York company at the Grand Opera House, Monday evening, March 13th.

"Three Twins" is a combination of everything desirable in musical comedy. Rarely is so much good material concentrated in one frothy musical comedy. Here there is no end of cleverness and originality, and at the same time enough plot to hold it all together and command unflagging interest until the fall of the curtain.

"Three Twins" is adapted from Mrs. Pacheco's "Incog". It is the story of a determined youth bent on marrying the woman of his choice, but who, naturally, is not the selection of the father. Not succeeding, he decides to disguise himself after a photograph he finds on the beach, and so persuade his irate father to give his consent. The photograph happens to be that of a married man, just convalescing from a nervous attack and returning from a sanitarium in search of his wife. He also has a twin brother who is engaged to a girl at the same resort, and who opportunely arrives upon the scene. So the three meet, and many screaming situations are created. Finally, the unfortunates are landed in a neighbouring insane asylum, and the faithful wife, the loving fiance and the confused sweetheart arrive to visit their individual interests that seem so suddenly to have become one and the same. The father and other principals also arrive, and things are straightened out more satisfactorily.

Clifton Crawford, the inimitable young Scotch comedian, who takes the part of the determined suitor, deserves marked credit. His monologue is distinctly original, and his English manner is not the usual boring imitation, but this time novel and clever, with no exaggeration. He dances and sings, and, in fact, is unusually pleasing. Miss Daisy Leon, the sweet heart, Joseph Allen, the irate father, Della Niven, the "cheerful weeper" and Elsie Mynne the General's ward; Hugh Fay, Russell Lennon, Ralph Locke and George Herbert are in the cast of principals and last, but by no means least, Mayme Gehrue, the famous "Yama Yama Girl."

DYSPEPSIA Can Be Cured.

This disease is the all prevailing malady of civilized life, and one which oftenest baffles all ordinary treatment. It gives rise to a great variety of distressing symptoms, such as distress after eating, rising and souring of food, wind in the stomach, heartburn, etc.

Nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an Irritant; hence the great difficulty of effecting a cure.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

B.B.B. regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the salivary and gastric juice to facilitate digestion, purifies the blood, and tones up the entire system.

Mrs. Herman Dickens, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia, and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured, and I can now eat anything without hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

Special Services

A large congregation in Knox Church last evening listened to one of the most forceful addresses that has ever been given in this city and that is saying a great deal. Rev. Mr. Ing... Woodside in simple, yet rich and effective language brought home to the audience their place in the work of the redemption of men.

Increased interest was shown by the increased attendance and those who were present are convinced that the services are a rare opportunity for Peterborough.

The song service was again conducted by Mr. McBretney and all joined in the old and the new hymns, audience and choir vieing with each other in vigor and spirit. Two solos by Mr. McBretney, "His thought for You and Me," and "A Step to Calvary," were very impressive. Rev. Mr. Woodside delivered a most effective statement of Christ's Call to Service in winning men. God is interested in men because they are part of His very Being. This is also our reason for seeking to save men. The passion of Moses, the passion of Paul, the compassion of Jesus for men should be ours. This intense sincerity must characterise our attitude toward men. Apart from this God's spirit cannot honor the worker. Recognizing the importance and necessity of this greatest of all responsibilities it is most lamentable to have to admit that parents are not reaching their children, employees are not reaching their men.

The service was closed immediately after the addresses by the Benediction and the audience acted as if it regretted the end and the people were slow in leaving. The song service commences to-night at 7.45 o'clock.

POLICE COURT

Nicolo Basciano, an Italian labourer, who resides at 541 Donegal Street, appeared before City Clerk Armstrong who presided in the absence of His Worship, Magistrate Dumble, at the Police Court this morning. Basciano was charged with stealing a quantity of brass and copper castings from the C.G.E. Company's plant, where he is employed on the construction work. The Police authorities made a search of the house yesterday with the result that they found the castings, also a hand saw, and some other things. Upon making the discovery, an officer was immediately sent to the C.G.E. and arrested the prisoner. He was remanded until to-morrow morning.

NOT INVOLVED IN THE LEAST

dealt with at the morning session, was directed against W. S. Morden and Matthew Wilson, K.C. It read:—

"That they did conspire, confederate, and agree with W. R. Travers, General Manager of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, to obtain the said W. R. Travers to give the Trusts & Guarantee Company a fraudulent, undue, or unfair preference over other creditors of the said Farmers Bank of Canada by changing the nature of the claim of the said Trusts & Guarantee Company against the said Farmers' Bank of Canada."

Mr. Travers being called, said that two call loans obtained by the bank from the Trusts & Guarantee Company, one for $75,000, was secured by bonds of the American Piano Company, and another for $100,000 by bonds of the Keeley Mine of the par value of one million.

OBITUARY

RICHARD ANGELSEY.

The death occurred this morning at 9 o'clock at his late residence, 149 Rubidge street, of Richard Angelsey, after a week's illness.

The funeral will take place on Friday morning at 9 o'clock from 149 Rubidge street to St. Peter's Cathedral, and thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery for interment.

DONATED CUP

Mr. D. O'Connell has very kindly donated a handsome cup as first prize in the road-race which will be a feature of the field day of sports to be held under the auspices of St. Peter's T. A. S. on Victoria Day, May 24th. The trophy will be known as the O'Connell Trophy. It has not yet been definitely decided whether it is to be won outright by the winner or to be competed for annually. The committee is at present discussing this question, as well as that of making the Victoria Day sports an annual affair.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

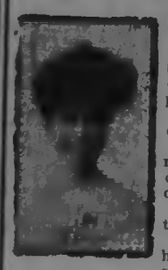
By Ruth Cameron

MY work was dragging wretchedly the other day. I was cross, nervous as a witch and quite unable to see anything worth living for or working for.

At first I couldn't understand what had put me in such a state of mind.

And then I happened to remember that, except once to mail some letters and once to feed the birds, I actually hadn't been outside the house for three days.

And I was thoroughly ashamed of myself.



Was it any wonder that I saw the world indigo purple?

Is it any wonder that any of the thousands of women who do that same thing get to feeling "as if I would fly," and to nagging their husbands and scolding their children and hating their homes, and having little private crying spells every day.

Not a bit. It's only a wonder to me that they don't do worse things.

Sometimes, at the end of a spell of bad weather, a neighbour will run in to see mother, and will say, "I do declare. This is the first time I've been out in five days."

My, but I'm glad I didn't have to be a housemate of that woman the last two or three days.

Seems to me a woman ought to be as ashamed of not having been out and aired herself as of not having aired her beds.

There is no cure for household disturbances like going out and getting into a fresh atmosphere, both mental and physical. The reason men do not take household disturbances and little quarrels so seriously as women is because they get out into the air and see people and get a fresher, saner perspective on the whole matter, while women stay at home and brood.

I know a very bright and wise woman who tries never to miss a day without going out for a brisk walk and a chat with some congenial friend, and who paraphrases Paderewski's famous statement about his finger exercise this way:

"If I miss my outing one day I know it.

"If I miss it two days my family knows it.

"And if I miss it three days even the butcher boy knows it."

If every woman went out and aired her lungs with outdoor ozone and [illegible] with the breath of sanity that [illegible] ...

"Labour" Submits His Views As To Present Day High Cost Of Living

Sir,—I have been reading of late the various letters expressive of opinions regarding the Reciprocity question but most of them have been written from either a manufacturer's or a farmer's standpoint but not till the other night did I see one in your issue written by a working man which I read with a certain amount of pride to think that one who I knew full well is from the ranks of labour, has had at last the courage to express his views upon this question. But he unfortunately came in for the condemnation of your critic "Simple Simon," who likened him to the old story of the "Kettle calling the Saucepan Black," and accused him of using egotistical and selfish reasons for supporting it. Now from what I knew of working man he was simply asking for a fair share of this world's goods as well as the farmer and manufacturer. Well might we of the ranks of labour exclaim with Shylock, "Sufferances is the body of all our tribe."

Now to get to my point it is this, is not the interest of the consumer as much right to be considered in this treaty as the producer? At present he (the consumer) has to help to pay in one instance alone for the emigration policy in bringing out labour for our farming community and indirectly, labour for our manufacturers and what has he in return? I fail to see; except as in many instances a keener competition in the labour market.

Workingman says our cost of living is too high, it has increased by leaps and bounds, but wages have not kept pace with that advance and this in many or I might say in most cases has been caused by Trusts and Combines fed and nourished by a protective policy.

Now take our meat trade, as I have mentioned the cost of living, and what do we find in to-day's paper, To ronto markets, export cattle averaging 6c per lb. Beef in our retail shops averaging some 12c to 14c per lb., and I question if the meat some of us purchase would pass this test for export. Some I know would not. Working man referred to the advance in butter, eggs, etc. Now perhaps some of your correspondents could give us a cause for this advance.

Now we are paying as much for these commodities here as they are paying in the Old Country to-day and the same are shipped from here. Now if Reciprocity is in any way going to remedy some of these evils that now exist I would say let us have a trial of it. Our Manufacturers Association (the strongest trades union that exist to-day) and the farmers have been to Ottawa to air their grievances. When are the ranks of labor going to air theirs?

As things are at present the manufacturer and the farmer are getting the oysters. We getting the shells.

What are the two great objections hinted at the treaty to-day, none but the cry of loyalty and annexation. I fail to see a very large amount of loyalty shown to the Motherland by the Conservative party. Their loyalty seems to me to exist in singing the National Anthem and taxing the imports from the Old Country in many cases with a 33 per cent. tariff. I will admit myself that I would have far sooner seen the tariff reduced on the products from the Old land.

In conclusion as to Annexation that has been a periodical cry for some years, when the decimal system was introduced we were going to be annexed. Are we as Canadians going to give up this heritage because our government tries to enter into a business transaction with the States. I think not.

Surely our government will not hand us over and I am perfectly satisfied that the land which gave many of us birth will not hand over her oldest daughter, as Kipling called Canada. No; to-day Canada is still daughter in her mother house but mistress in her own, and is still willing to abide and live under the flag that for a thousand years has braved the battle and the breeze.

Yours,
LABOUR.

ANOTHER OLD RESIDENT HAS PASSED AWAY

The hand of death has removed another old resident of Peterborough, in the person of Eliza M. Frood, relict of the late Templeton Brown, who passed away last evening after a week's illness at the family residence, 581 Gilmour street. The late Mrs. Brown had been an almost continuous resident of this city since 1849, although she lived for a short time in the United States. She was the daughter of the late Major James M. Frood of the Imperial Life Guards, Dublin, and was born in the capital city of Ireland in 1821. In the year 1849 she came to Peterborough with her sister, Mrs. James Reid, who survives her to live with her uncle, the Hon. A. T. Stewart at Auburn. She was married to the late Templeton Brown in 1850.

She is survived by three sons, Mr. William A. Brown of Melbourne, Australia; Mr. Chas. N. Brown of Peterborough, and Mr. Alfred S. Brown of Vancouver, B. C., and by one daughter, Miss Bertha F. Brown of this city. Mrs. Jas. Reid, 310 Maitland avenue, Peterborough, and two other sisters residing in Ireland, are also left to mourn her loss.

Although in her ninety-first year the deceased had always enjoyed good health and her faculties were unimpaired. She was taken ill only a week ago.

The deceased was widely known in Peterborough, her many estimable qualities having won for her the affection and esteem of everyone and her death will be deeply regretted. She was a member of St. Paul's Presbyterian church until a short time ago, but recently having taken up residence near St. Andrew's church, has attended there.

The funeral will take place to-morrow (Thursday) afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the family residence, 581 Gilmour street, to Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Robert Pogue and Rev. Jas. Rollins will officiate.

"THREE TWINS" WILL BE THEATRICAL TREAT OF SEASON

What is promised as the real theatrical treat of the season is the forthcoming engagement of Jos. M. Gaites musical comedy "Three Twins," with Clifton Crawford and the original New York company at the Grand Opera House, Monday evening, March 13th.

"Three Twins" is a combination of everything desirable in musical comedy. Rarely is so much good material concentrated in one frothy musical comedy. Here there is no end of cleverness and originality, and at the same time enough plot to hold it all together and command unflagging interest until the fall of the curtain.

"Three Twins" is adapted from Miss Pacheco's "Incog". It is the story of a determined youth bent on marrying the woman of his choice, but who, naturally, is not the selection of the father. Not succeeding, he decides to disguise himself after a photograph he finds on the beach, and so persuade his irate father to give his consent. The photograph happens to be that of a married man, just convalescing from a nervous attack and returning from a sanitarium in search of his wife. He also has a twin brother who is engaged to a girl at the same resort, and who opportunely arrives upon the scene. So the three meet, and many screaming situations are created. Finally, the unfortunates are landed in a neighbouring insane asylum, and the faithful wife, the loving fiance and the confused sweetheart arrive to visit their individual interests that seem so suddenly to have become one and the same. The father and other principals also arrive, and things are straightened out more satisfactorily.

Clifton Crawford, the inimitable young Scotch comedian, who takes the part of the determined suitor, deserves marked credit. His monologue is distinctly original, and his English manner is not the usual boring imitation, but this time novel and clever, with no exaggeration. He dances and sings, and, in fact, is unusually pleasing. Miss Daisy Leon, the sweetheart, Joseph, Allen, the irate father, Della Niven, the "cheerful weeper" and Elsie Mynne the General's ward. Hugh Fay, Russell Lennon, Ralph Locke and George Herbert are in the cast of principals and last, but by no means least, Mayme Gehrue, the famous "Yama Yama Girl."

Special Services

A large congregation in Knox Church last evening listened to one of the most forceful addresses that has ever been given in this city and that is saying a great deal. Rev. Mr. Ing Woodside in simple, yet rich and effective language brought home to the audience their place in the work of the redemption of men.

Increased interest was shown by the increased attendance and those who were present are convinced that the services are a rare opportunity for Peterborough.

The song service was again conducted by Mr. McBretney and all joined in the old and the new hymns, audience and choir vieing with each other in vigor and spirit. Two solos by Mr. McBretney, "His thought for You and Me," and "A Step to Calvary," were very impressive. Rev. Mr. Woodside delivered a most effective statement of Christ's Call to Service in winning men. God is interested in men because they are part of His very Being. This is also our reason for seeking to save men. The passion of Moses, the passion of Paul, the compassion of Jesus for men should be ours. This intense sincerity must characterise our attitude toward men. Apart from this God's spirit cannot honor the worker. Recognizing the importance and necessity of this greatest of all responsibilities it is most lamentable to have to admit that parents are not reaching their children, employees are not reaching their men.

The service was closed immediately after the addresses by the Benediction and the audience acted as if it regretted the end and the people were slow in leaving. The song service commences to-night at 7.45 o'clock.

POLICE COURT

Nicolo Bascano, an Italian labourer, who resides at 544 Dublin Street, appeared before Chief [illegible] this morning. Bascano was charged with stealing a quantity of brass and copper castings from the C.G.E. Company's plant, where he is employed on the construction work. The Police authorities made a search of the house yesterday with the result that they found the castings, also a hand saw, and some other things. Upon making the discovery, an officer was immediately sent to the C.G.E. and arrested the prisoner. He was remanded until to-morrow morning.

ENJOYABLE DEBATE AT THE LYCEUM

ancial problem which an education of that kind entails. Take our medical men, for instance, were they to be cut off from the reach of mankind, our death rate would increase to alarming proportions. When a man ceases to exist, he is down and out. Obliterate the medical fraternity and the body is gone. Where is the ordinary layman that will compare to the late Daniel O'Connel, one of the most brilliant speakers that ever stood on the floor of the British House of Commons, had accrued such good results for the moral uplift of the Irish peasantry. That was the inevitable result of a College education.

Vincent McCabe next replied for the affirmative. If the majority of our young men were college-trained men, our towns and cities would soon be filled with educational institutions. There would be no smoke stacks or industries of any account. The speaker suggested that the best possible education for the average young man of to-day would be a year in the high school, supplemented by a term in the collegiate, and then go and learn a trade, or go directly into business, and they will advance more rapidly than the majority of our college trained men. McKenzie and Mann, Timothy Eaton, Thomas A. Edison were all self-made men without the advantages of a college education.

Mr. Donoghue replied for the negative. He admitted, as did the affirmative, that college education develops all that is best in a man. The business which was so often referred to by the affirmative, is done, principally by young girls, such as stenography, book-keeping, etc. We cannot all be Timothy Eatons, or Vanderbilts, either. Russell Sage was a greedy, grasping man, who took all his meals at the quick lunch counter and would never pay a car fare if he could get out of it. Would it not be better to strike the happy medium and have a well-rounded man, physically, mentally and morally speaking. Ninety-five per cent. of our business men fail, according to statistics. In Peterborough we have about one hundred professional men, and nobody can deny but what they are a prosperous looking aggregation, despite the fact that they are college trained men.

Five minutes was then allowed to the leader of the opposition, Mr. Dorris, to reply to the negative argument. He gave them credit for the strong defence of a losing cause, and referred to the Quebec bridge disaster, saying that had the work been in the hands of practical men, instead of theorists, the disaster would not have occurred. He thought that priests should not come under discussion, whatever. They are servants of God and are exceptional men. Should trouble, such as strikes, occur on our prominent railways we would not revert to the services of the college trained men, but would call out our roadmasters and practical men, also master mechanics.

Rev. Father Sullivan of Port Hope, then gave an address, which was followed by a similar one by Rev. Dr. O'Brien and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick of Ennismore.

Rev. Father McColl then called upon the judge, Dr. McPherson, to deliver the verdict. His decision was in favour of the Peterborough Debating Club, they having won by a margin of 2½ per cent.

The meeting was then brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

NOT INVOLVED IN THE LEAST

dealt with at the morning session, was directed against W. S. Morden and Matthew Wilson, K.C. It read:—

"That they did conspire, confederate, and agree with W. R. Travers, General Manager of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, to obtain the said W. R. Travers to give the Trusts & Guarantee Company a fraudulent, undue, or unfair preference over other creditors of the said Farmers Bank of Canada by changing the nature of the claim of the said Guarantee Company against the Farmers' Bank Canada" Travers being called, said that [illegible] obtained by the bank from the Trusts & Guarantee Company, one for $75,000, was secured by bonds of the American Piano Company, and another for $100,000 by bonds of the Keeley Mine of the par value of one million.

"A MAIDEN AND A MOUSE"

By W. J. Cresbie

CHAPTER I.

The great Civil War was raging. Royalist and Roundhead—each in the belief that he was battling for the right—were leaping, like famished wolves, at one another's throats.

Tidings of a Royalist victory had just reached Elmleigh Hall; and, to celebrate the event, Sir Geoffrey Marston—heedless of the strict injunctions of his doctor—had ordered a second bottle of wine to be brought to him.

"The King! God bless him! And confusion to his enemies!" And the old man drained his glass.

"Oh, father!"

Glancing round, he beheld Laura, the elder of his daughters—a bonny maid of nineteen—standing in the doorway.

"Drinking wine again! Truly I am ashamed of you."

Grave reproof was in her tones and in her clear blue eyes as she advanced towards him.

The old gentleman began to fidget in his high-backed chair. "But the occasion, Sweet Heart," quoth he, "the occasion! His Majesty—"

"I know. I heard your toast. But drinking His Majesty's health will assuredly not improve your own."

Sh ecarefully refilled his glass; then suddenly, placing the bottle behind her back, she broke into a merry laugh.

"No more to-night, my dear!" quoth she. "Au revoir."

In spite of himself Sir Geoffrey smiled. "Come back, you rogue!" he cried. "Come back!"

But she was gone; and with a sigh he resigned himself to the inevitable.

A Royalist to the tips of her daint; fingers was Laura Marston. Nevertheless, her gladness at the news of victory was not wholly unalloyed. For was it not bought at the cost of many precious lives!—the life, mayhap, of Philip Winram! Many a time since the war began her sunny face had clouded as she thought of the perils he was facing; many and fervent were the prayers she offered for his safety. No romantic, girlish fancy held her beneath its spell; her love for the man to whom she was betrothed was deep, unswerving—a love that would end only with her life.

Rejoining her father she nestled at his feet before the great log fire; then, glancing up into his face, "Father, when, think you, will this cruel war be over?"

"Ere long, I hope, Sweet Heart. Perchance before the year is out."

"God grant it!" she murmured.

"And then," he went on, smoothing her fair silken hair, "I suppose I must lose the treasure I value most. You love the lad, Laura?"

"Why, yes, ofs ourse. Next to my father, he is the noblest man in England."

"Noblest fiddlesticks! A hare-brained Cavalier! Well, well, I will not tease you. Philip is a good lad. But," he added; "were he the best man that ever buckled on sword he would still be unworthy of the hand o fLaura—"

"Hush!" she cried, placing her fingers upon his lips. As she did so, her sister, the dark-haired Winne, entered.

At sight of her Laura sprang to her feet. Winnie'f face was taken, and there was a tremor in her voice, as she said: "Philip Winram is here. Be not alarmed. He is wounded, but only, I think, slightly. The doctor is with him."

Laura's face paled a little. "Take me to him," she said simply.

Upon a couch in an adjoining room lay Philip Winram, his doublet torn an dmuddied, a blood-stained bandage covering the bullet-hole in his shoulder.

That he was suffering mental distress as well as bodily pain was unmistakeably evident. But at the sight of hi abetrothed a sudden gleam of gladness flashed from his dark eyes. And as she knelt at his side—soothing him as a mother soothes an ailing child—her gentle touch and words of comfort brought a look of content to his haggard features.

"'Tis but a scratch, dearest," he said, "this veriest trifle. I have lost a little blood—that is all. Have they told you how it happened?"

She shook her head.

"I have been robbed," he cried with sudden excitement, "robbed of the King's letter. The scoundrel was disguised as a Cavalier. Heavens! If I had only strength to sit my horse!" He made as if he would rise; but Laura gently forced him back.

"Hush, dear one, hush," she said softly. "Do not grieve about it. His Majesty will hold you blameless."

"Nay. I have failed in my mission, and His Majesty's Cause must therefore suffer. God! I would give my sword-hand to regain his letter!"

So saying he closed his eyes, and sank back wearily upon the pillows.

In obedience to a signal from the portly and rubicund doctor, who was standing near, Laura softly followed him from the room, leaving her lover in care of Winnie.

"Will he die?" she asked—her voice trembling a little—as they stood together in the spacious hallway.

"Die! My dear young lady, he will be fit for duty in a week or so—a month at the farthest."

She drew a deep breath of relief. "I thank God!" she murmured.

"By and by," he resumed, "I will give him a sleeping draught. Also, to-morrow, I will bring with me some tonics; though, to be sure, the best medicine I can prescribe will be the presence of Mistress Marston."

Briefly then he acquainted her with the circumstances attending her lover's misadventure, which were these. The moon, he said, had already risen when thereport of firearms came to the ear of Atkin, the porter of the lodge. Hastening out, he had almost reached the gate when he perceived a horseman galloping past—a Royalist apparently, judging by his plumed beaver and flowing Cavalier locks. So soon as he was out of hearing, Atkin quickly walked in the opposite direction, and ere long discovered, lying in a wayside ditch, the unconscious for mof Philip Winram. As speedily as might te he carried the stricken man to the lodge, and then proceeded to bandage the wound, having meanwhile sent his little son for the doctor.

"I gather," concluded the man of medicine, "that Master Winram had received imperative orders to carry with all possible despatch the King's letter to the General (whose name I have forgotten) commanding His Majesty's forces quartered at Hatton. As you perceived just now, the loss of that letter is troubling him grievously. His mind, I need scarcely say, must be diverted from the matter; for, albeit the wound is not a dangerous one, constant brooding may bring on a fever."

"I will do all I can," said Laura; but her heart sank because of the doctor's concluding words.

"Of course, of course," he said cheerily. He paused, and added: "As for that highwayman and would-be assassin, I should dearly like to run him to earth—'fore Gad, I would! But, alas," and he shook his head, "I am fifty-five, fifteen stone in weight, and no horseman."

CHAPTER II.

The knowledge that he was a dastard and a traitor did not trouble Richard Irgill overmuch; indeed, in the matter of ethics his conscience—if he ever possessed such a thing—was exceedingly elastic.

For many months, in the role of a Royalist, he had supplied the king's enemies with information; afterwards, fearing that his treachery was on the eve of being discovered, he discarded his plumed beaver, cropped his poll, an djoined the Roundheads, certain of whom found him an excellent tool.

To-night, as hegalloped past the gates of Elmleigh Hall, he was in morse, he gave no thought to the high good humor. A stranger to reman who mhe had left bleeding in the wayside ditch; on the contrary, proud of the treacherous shot that had sent Philip Winram reeling from his saddle—he congratulated himself upon the easy fashion in which he had attained his object. "Egad!" he chuckled, "a god night's work!" And in fancy he could hear the chink of the golden guineas he would receive o nthe morrow in exchange for Charles Stuart's letter.

For an hour or more he rode steadily forward. He was now in the heart of a district wholly loyal to the king. Of this he was aware. He was also aware that a strong Royalist force was quartered at Hatton, that until he reached the next cross-roads each yard of ground he covered brought him nearer to their camp, and that possibly he might ere long encounter a picket upon the road. Nevertheless, he assured himself that there was no cause for fear. Was not his disguise complete? And, in case any should question him, had he not upon the tip of his tongue a story plausible enough to deceive the shrewdest Cavalier that ever sat a saddle? Fortune, he said, was a woman—fickle as an April day—and albeit of late she had treated him somewhat coldly, surely she was now beginning to smile upon him! But, alas! Fortune again proved unkind. His horse fell lame; and between him and his journey's end lay many a mile. What was to be done? And he glanced about him despairingly. Whatever the cost, a horse he must have, and

R. L. BORDEN'S HOIST MOTION WAS DEFEATED

ON FIRST DIVISION ON TRADE AGREEMENT GOVERNMENT HAD CLEAR MAJORITY OF 41

Only Two Liberals Voted With the Opposition, Mr. W. O. Healey Voting With the Government—A Matter of Honour Says Fielding.

LLOYD HARRIS OPPOSED

Ottawa, March 9.—By a vote of 112 to 70, proclaimed amid prolonged Liberal cheering, the House of Commons decided last night that there should be no waiting on Washington. By a majority of 42 the proposal of the Conservative leader to postpone further consideration of the reciprocal trade agreement was negatived. The vote came at the close of a sharp, tense debate, in which the Minister of Finance declared that prompt and businesslike consideration of the arrangement was "an obligation of national honor on the part of Canada with the Government of the United States."

Mr. Borden's amendment was as follows:

"That all the words after the word 'that,' in the proposed motion, be omitted, and the following substituted therefor, 'that the reciprocity agreement embodied in the resolutions submitted to this House by the Minister of Finance on the 26th day of January last was also submitted on the same day by special message of the President of the Congress of the United States of America, which was then in session.

"That the said session has now expired, and Congress has failed to approve and carry out the said agreement.

"That a considerable length of time must necessarily elapse before the said agreement can be dealt with by Congress at a special session.

"That the fiscal changes proposed by the said agreement are of a far-reaching character, and constitute a substantial reversal of the policy which has been approved by the people of Canada.

"That in the opinion of this House the said resolutions should not be proceeded with until the electors shall have had an opportunity of pronouncing upon their merits."

The vote stood 70 for and 111 against giving a majority of 41. The division came suddenly after eight o'clock and some members were unable to reach the House.

W. M. German was thus prevented from recording his vote with the Opposition. There were eighteen pairs. Mr. Monk and the Nationalists voted with the amendment, also Hon. Clifford Sifton and Lloyd Harris. A Verville, Liberal Independent, voted with the Government. W. O. Seeley (Wentworth) who had been talking of opposing the resolution, voted with the Government.

Lloyd Harris (Brantford), on rising to continue the debate in committee on Mr. Fielding's resolution, said he regarded this as the most important question that had come before the country since Confederation. He was not able to support the Government in this, and the circumstances occassioned him considerable regret. He claimed that it was a departure from the policy which he had thought was the policy of the Liberal party.

Dealing with the question as received by the country he said the farmers themselves were by no means a unit in its favor. For instance an agricultural paper had taken a plebiscite of its subscribers, and found one thousand ballots in favor of the agreement with six hundred against.

Mr. Borden, rising to move his amendment, immediately took advantage of his possession of the floor to criticize the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier Tuesday. The Prime Minister had indulged in epithets, and the protests of the fruit growers, millers and packers he characterized as the howling of wolves. He read portions of Sir William Van Horne's letter, whose opinions, he said, were based on experience and knowledge of facts.

The Prime Minister asks, observed Mr. Borden, that these proposals be passed through Parliament, because there was a condition of non-intercourse with United States existing. If there was a state of non-intercourse with the United States, how did the Government account for the fact that three-fifths of Canada's import trade was with the United States.

The Premier had affirmed that reciprocity would bring injury to no particular industry, said Mr. Borden. This argument applied with crushing force to the fruit industry. The farmers would not be satisfied to compete with the natural products of twelve or fourteen countries and pay duty on all manufactured products which come into Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Borden said, "I realise that Canada has a plain duty and a grave responsibility in one important aspect. She ought to be—I trust she will be—a bond of union and amity between the Empire and the republic. That high mission can best be fulfilled when Canadians are inspired by a belief in their institutions, their destiny, their country and themselves as intense as that which pervades the people of the United States."

Hon. W. S. Fielding in reply said that he hoped the debate would go on, because he believed that every day saw an increase in the number of its supporters. He quoted from the official record of the Washington negotiations to show that President Taft on one hand and the Canadian Ministers on the other had undertaken to have the proposals ratified. President Taft, by calling an extra session of Congress so promptly, had loyally lived up to the terms of the agreement, and for the Canadian Ministers to fail to do so would be a breach of faith which would dishonor the Government, Parliament and Canada.

Drank Carbolic.

Kingston, March 9.—"Good-bye, I'm going." With these words to his wife, who was near him, Gordon Comper, aged 18, pulled out a bottle of carbolic acid in the dining-room of the Grimson Hotel, at noon yesterday, drank the contents, and rushed to the Hotel Dieu, but died shortly after he arrived.

Despondency and financial worry is given as the cause. He was married six months ago. His brother committed suicide last summer in a fit of jealousy over a girl.

Didn't Pass Exam., Sues.

Montreal, March 9.—Before Justice Bruneau, L. A. Handfield is suing the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Quebec, claiming that when going under examination for admission to the study of medicine, he failed to pass because of irregularities, for which the examining board should account, and for which he should not suffer. He claims questions were changed arbitrarily, and that the examiner sent a sub-titute instead of attending personally.

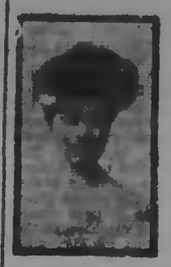
Saved Children From Fire.

London, Ont., March 9.—Two children of L. E. Murphy of Nelson street, aged respectively three years and six months, were saved by their mother from fire which broke out in their home at noon yesterday.

The mother went to a neighbor's and the little boy got playing with matches and started a fire in the bedroom. She returned in time to pull the children out through a window. The house was badly gutted.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron



IN BOSTON the other day the first steps were taken toward the formation of a Servant Girls' Union.

This union plans to demand for its members an eight-hour day, not less than nine dollars a week, and ex exemption from any but certain duties definitely agreed upon as servant girl's duties. If this union is successful in Boston, it plans to extend itself rapidly over the whole country.

I can plainly imagine how the average housewife, who is already paying nearly double what she did fifteen years ago for domestic service, shudders at this news, so I have a suggestion ready for her.

Beat them to it.

Get a housewives' union first.

What will its purpose be? To keep down wages and lengthen hours, you ask?

No, I didn't mean exactly that.

Tell you what I mean. Over in Germany there has recently been formed a "League of Politeness." Its members pledge themselves to politeness to all, rich or poor, insignificant or great, with whom they come in contact. And by politeness the women mean not just polished manners, but that finer, deeper politeness which has been beautifully defined as meaning, "To do or say the kindest thing in the kindest way."

Well now, why can't the housewives' union be a sort of league of justice and kindness—a do-as-you-would-be-done-by league?

Its members would promise to treat the maids so justly and kindly that they should have no excuse for belonging to any hostile union.

To definite requirements in regard to work, to regularity in regard to pay, to liberality in regard to time off, to justice in regard to complaints, to humanity and readiness to put themselves in her place, in regard to all relations with their maids the mistresses who belonged to this union would be required to pledge themselves.

Perhaps it might be well if they were also obliged to sign a written pledge something like this: "I will promise to always keep in mind that my maid is not a housework machine, but a woman like myself, with the same longings for happiness that I have, and to do all in my power to give her a fair chance for that happiness."

Not to be accepted as a member of this union would, of course, be a public disgrace.

Does it all sound so very absurd to you?

I hope not, for if you are the kind of woman I think you are, I am sure you are already a silent member of this unformed league, and only waiting for its formation to give it your public support.

GAVE UP GOOD MONEY.

Accusers Tell of Dealings With Mr. George Munroe.

New York, March 9.—Witnesses from Australia, New Mexico, Canada and many states were on hand yesterday to testify in the U. S. District Court in the trial of George Munroe, who is charged with misusing mails for alleged sales of Marconi wireless stock.

Eight persons, who said they were dupes, told on Tuesday how they had sent from $20 to $2,500 each in response to letters signed "Munroe & Munroe," and got nothing in return.

Addison Kingsbury of South Coventry, Conn., told how he had sent a $100 check for stock which he never received. Barney McConville, a New York detective, stationed in the financial district, recounted his investigations of Munroe's firm and said he had placed the evidence in the hands of the federal authorities.

Chris. Kettridge of London, chief transfer clerk for the Marconi Wireless Co. of England, testified that no stock had ever been issued to Munroe, and that Munroe was not authorized to act as the company's agent in this country. Munroe told doubting clients, according to previous testimony, that the firm was the American agent for the Marconi Co.

Walter M. Watson, a stock transfer clerk, formerly in the employ of Munroe, gave testimony against his erstwhile chief, and was on the stand when an adjournment was taken for the day.

While the Munroe trial was going on Skelton C. Barr, a member of Burr Bros., late dealers in stocks at the offices of which were raided in November last by postoffice inspectors, was arraigned in the U. S. Circuit Court, on an indictment charging misuse of the mails. He entered a plea of not guilty and was released in $10,000 bail.

Bell Telephone Charges.

Montreal, March 9.—The question of the Bell Telephone Co.'s charge of $5 for the improved telephone instrument and the matter of telephone rates and tolls will be gone into before the Railway Commissioners at their meeting to be held in Montreal in April next.

Crown Attorney Archambault returned from Ottawa yesterday and stated that the legal counsel of the Bell Telephone Co. had asked the railway commissioners for a delay of one week, which had been granted, and that this left the time so short that it would be impossible for him to prepare his reply to the company's plea for the meeting on the 21st inst. at Ottawa.

Oldest Resident Dead.

Woodstock, March 9.—Wm. Sweet, aged 75 years, Woodstock's oldest resident, died yesterday. He was born in Biddeford, England, and in his early days was a decorator and painter in London, Eng. He assisted in the decoration of Westminster Abbey when the late Queen Victoria was crowned. He was one of a family of nine, and is survived by three brothers, two of whom are almost eighty years of age.

UNITED STATES CALLS MOBILIZATION MANOEUVRES

General Opinion in Washington is That Affair Has Been Talked Over With the Mexican President

THE SITUATION NOW

Washington, March 9.—The officers who set the machinery going for the great gathering of United States troops and warships from end to end of the Mexican frontier yesterday drew their first long breath in 36 hours and sat back to "watch the thing work." From all directions trains are carrying soldiers, horses, field guns and ammunition toward the places of rendezvous.

Official Washington still insists, for publication, that the sole purpose of this sudden and unexpected display of the military resources of the nation is to engage in field manoeuvres and practice of officers and men in land and naval activities under service conditions; in private they make little attempt to conceal the relations of the "manoeuvres" to conditions actual and potential over the Mexican border-line.

It is significant to notice that the troops are equipped with ball cartridge, although it is invariable practice to supply troops with ammunition for peaceful manoeuvres.

The conundrum over which all are puzzling is the question of the real attitude of the Mexican Government toward this unprecedented display of war resources at its doorstep. It is the general belief that the Diaz Government was not in the least taken by surprise in the matter. It is taken for granted that the unprecedented mobilization of troops within a few steps of the Mexican soil never would have been effected without suitable interchange between the two Governments to preclude the possibility of misunderstanding.

Those who hold this view think it sufficient to ask what would happen if one great power in Europe should suddenly mass a quarter of its entire military force within striking distance of the imaginary line separating it from another, unless a perfect understanding existed in advance as to the purpose of the movement. "There would be war overnight," these people say, and assuming the validity of their argument, they build upon it the belief that the presence of this great naval and military force almost under the shadow of the Mexican flag is not only not distasteful, but is actually welcome to the Diaz Government.

In addition to the 2,000 marines which will be quartered at Guanamato, 500 will be drawn from the barracks along the western coast of the United States and placed on board the armored cruisers of the Pacific fleet. These vessels will be assembled at San Pedro and San Diego, Cal. The cruisers California, South Dakota and Pennsylvania already are at San Diago, while the West Virginia and Maryland are at the Puget Sound navy yard, from which point they will sail for southern waters within a few days.

Mexican Embassy's Denial.

The Mexican embassy has issued a statement branding as preposterous reports current that the Mexican Government was looking to the United States for aid in regulating its internal affairs. The statement follows:—

"The insensate rumor that Mexico had asked, or was going to ask American intervention to settle its own internal affairs is ridiculous. The republic has the means and the power, and is supported by public opinion, to enable it to suppress the insurrection. This embassy affirms categorically that Blatt and Converse were taken prisoners on Mexican territory and not on American soil as falsely has been represented by the press."

The two prisoners referred to are both Americans who joined the insurrectos along the Rio Grande. They were captured by Mexican Federal troops and are now in prison. It has been stated that both men were taken after they crossed the boundary into the United States.

Good News for Hamilton.

Hamilton, March 9.—Hamilton's street railway service, for many years a joke to the outside public, will be so remodelled before the end of the year that visitors will not recognize it.

The company will purchase a number of modern double truck cars and consider the question of making several extensions suggested by the city, including a cross town line in the northeast end.

Need More Humane Cells.

Kingston, March 9.—The coroner's jury on the death of Convict Charles Goldsmith found that he met death at his own hands by strangulation. The jury recommended that more humane punishment cells be provided. Goldsmith was a dangerous prisoner, and was placed in this cell because he wanted to fight a guard. Six years ago he attacked Deputy Matron Smith and almost killed her.

A Literary Wedding.

New York, March 9.—Seumas McManus, writer of Irish folklore stories, will be married to Miss Carolina Paez, writer of children's books, in this city to-day. Miss Paez is a granddaughter of Gen. Jose Paez who was the first President of Venezuela.

NEW POWER BILL WAS INTRODUCED

Hon. Adam Beck Aims Measure at the Obstinate Municipalities—The Three Fifths Clause

SIX MONTHS' HOIST

Toronto, March 9.—Another Hydro-electric power bill was introduced in the Legislature yesterday by Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the commission. A lively debate on the "three-fifths clause" also afforded the well-filled galleries consolation for the disappointment of those visitors who were on the watch for the anticipated reciprocity debate, which may possibly be reached this afternoon.

Hon. Col. Matheson announced a modification of the proposed tax on trotting horse race meetings. Instead of being required to pay a tax of $10 for a one-day, $40 for a two-day, or $60 for a three-day meetings, the tax will be $10 a day up to four days, a total of $40, with permission for one running horse race each day. The tax for additional days would be $200, the same as for the seven-day Jockey Club meetings.

The new tax of two cents a share on the sale of stocks is not to include bonds or debentures. Its payment on stocks is to be made by the transferee.

Hon. Adam Beck's new power bill provides that any one or more of the ratepayers in a municipality may apply to the municipal corporation for Hydro-electric power, and it will be compulsory for the municipal council to apply to the commission for an estimate.

The commission will furnish an estimate of the cost per horsepower to the council, which will be required to call a special meeting to consider the matter within a month of receiving the estimate from the commission. The council will be empowered, if the terms are satisfactory, to pass a by-law for entering into a contract with the commission, also to issue 20-year debentures to defray the local installation cost.

In police villages in a township, the trustees will have the powers which the act confers upon municipal councils, to make contracts with the Hydro-Electric Commission.

W. Proudfoot (Lib., Centre Huron) moved the second reading of his bill to repeal the three-fifths clause in the local option law. A review of the repeal notes, he said, showed that the three-fifths vote was not required to give permanence to the law.

In the recent reply made by the Premier to the temperance deputation, the leader of the Government had spoken of protecting private rights. Was that an intimation that the Government was considering compensation? Mr. Proudfoot admitted that the five per cent. tax did not indicate a leaning towards compensation to license-holders, but the Government, by its three-fifths clause, had kept scores of licenses in existence. The Government should not only repeal the three-fifths clause, but also abolish bar-rooms from the province entirely.

Hon. W. J. Hanna said he wondered if Mr. Proudfoot would dare to ask even the Dominion Alliance to ask for the restoration of the local option law of the previous period in place of the law as amended in 1906, even with the three-fifths clause. In the old law the local option bylaws were at the whim of municipal councils.

As late as 1905 there were but few local option municipalities, 52 per cent. are without licenses with a population of 930,000.

Hon. Mr. Hanna thought Mr. Proudfoot did not represent his party in advocating provincial prohibition, as Hon. A. G. MacKay had declared local option to be the best law for Ontario.

In Ontario same temperance leaders now approved of the provision, including Bishop Williams and E. Fielding, of the Commercial Travelers' Association.

Hon. Mr. Hanna announced that the Government had decided to amend the law this session by reducing the local option vote strictly to resident voters. This would be eminently fair to both parties.

Hon. A. G. MacKay and Allan Studholme said they were for one man one vote.

Hon. Mr. Hanna moved the six months' hoist, which was carried.

Valentine Stock will ask the Government if any report has been received on the bi-lingual school question; also for certain particulars in regard to Rideau Park.

Kept Open on Sunday.

Ottawa, March 9.—The provincial authorities have taken action against the Null Amusement Co., controlling the Odeon Theatre, for a contravention of the Quebec Sabbath Day Observance Act, in keeping their theatre open for theatrical performances on Sunday.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Col. Fred Stone of Chatham has been officially notified of his appointment as senior country judge at Sault Ste. Marie.

Quebec is not yet ready to adopt the principle of one man one vote. This was the announcement made yesterday in the Legislature by Premier Gouin.

Wallaceburg, Ont., is without a chief of police, Chief Best having resigned yesterday owing to friction arising over being asked to assume added responsibilities.

At a meeting of the Dominion Rifle Association executive it was decided the Canadian Bisley team should sail on June 23. This means that they will not be there in time for the coronation.

In the Manitoba House yesterday, Hon. Colin Campbell, Attorney-General, was charged by T. H. Johnson with grafting. It is alleged Campbell had been using criminal labor to his own benefit by having squads of prisoners doing chores at his private residence.

Tilt Over Reciprocity.

London, March 9.—Every time reciprocity is mentioned in Parliament there is a warm passage-at-arms. Mr. Balfour, leader of the Opposition, and Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary, had a brush yesterday in the House of Commons over Ambassador Bryce. Mr. Balfour wanted to know what instructions had been sent to the ambassador, and why British manufacturers had not been consulted during the negotiations between the United States and Canada.

The tendency would be for the Americans to put pressure on Canada to raise the duties against the United Kingdom, said Mr. Balfour. The only bright spot, he said, was Premier Laurier's reiterated wish for imperial preference. This question is not dead in Canada and I can assure the Government it is not dead here, he exclaimed warmly.

The Foreign Secretary replied that the Government had not sent any instructions to Ambassador Bryce, and did not propose to, except to endorse entirely all he had done. The manufacturers, he said, had not been consulted because both parties to the agreement were desirous of secrecy.

Dr. McKay For Moderator.

Brockville, March 9.—The Brockville presbytery at its meeting here yesterday nominated Rev. Dr. McKay, foreign mission secretary, for moderator of the next general assembly, and Rev. John McDougall of Spencerville, as moderator of the synod of Ottawa and Montreal. The call by the Athens' congregation to Rev. W. H. Montgomery of Sombra, Ont., was sustained and the induction fixed for the 23rd inst. Commissioners to the general assembly were also appointed.

Appreciation

1910 was a banner year with us, but 1911 carries even greater promise, because we have thousands of patients in this city and vicinity who are wearing glasses prescribed by us, many of whom could not be fitted elsewhere, and we know that they will not lose an opportunity of speaking a good word for us.

We take this occasion to acknowledge our indebtedness to our friends and patrons, our appreciation of their good will and faith in us, which have helped to make our success so great. We need not disguise the fact that we believe that we have deserved well of you. That if you have had confidence in us and have bestowed upon us your patronage it is because we have done something to warrant it. We have done "the best we could" and we purpose to keep right on doing so.

We are deeply grateful to our friends and customers for their loyalty. We ask for and hope to merit a continuance of the same.

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it had worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. AMERICAN GIRL'S SWEET TOOTH

$125,000,000 Spent on "Candies" Annually in the United States—Lozenges for Lunch

The American girl's love for sweets is the subject of an article in the current issue of the "Confectioners' Union."

"Miss America begins eating sweets at seven and continues until she is seventy, and is declared to be the original and the real 'Candy Kid.' From morning till very late in the evening she constantly munches sweetstuffs of a thousand different varieties and flavors. Every twenty-four hours over twenty-four large car-loads of candy are eaten within the boundary lines of the United States.

"When Miss America is a little girl she is content to eat the simpler kinds of confectionery. But as she gets a little older her tastes grow more aesthetic and her sense of flavors gets more subtle. When she enters the schoolroom she must have a small box at least tucked away handy. Otherwise she would never be able to get through the strenuous duties of a school day.

"And the habit grows on her as she gets older. She must keep a few pounds of her favorite confection in her room when at home, in her bag when travelling, and in the hamper when starting out for a motor-car tour.

"A few dozen of the greater factories turn out millions and millions of pounds of candies annually, but the most prying of the men with the Government banks are unable to get at the amount of sweetmeats that are turned out annually in boarding-school dormitories, home kitchens, and over the flame of the alcohol lamp.

"If Miss America's annual candy supply were loaded on one train of cars of the fullest capacity, there would be something over 8,000 cars full of boxes, buckets, and glass jars. This load of sweetmeats for the sweet tooth of the American girl costs the consumers about $125,000,000 every twelve months.

"Candy eating is rather a modern growth. In 1850 all the candy that was made in America would have sold for the paltry sum of $3,000,000. No one paid much attention to the candy business. In 1870 the candy shops of the United States turned out $15,000,000 worth of sweets. Another decade elapsed, and the candy business more than doubled in value. People were getting prosperous, and the candy shops were just beginning to reap the harvest that was to be theirs.

"Fifteen years later the business had become a gigantic thing. This was just about the time of the beginning of the great candy craze that has never been checked since it started to sweep over the country. Many men acquired the habit in the beginning of the craze, and have never freed themselves from it. There are hundreds of women who lunch daily off a few pieces of candy.

"It takes an army as big as a modern military division to turn out the sticks, cubes, drops, and lozenges of sugar and fruit juices that disappear down the throat of the American girl every day in the year. Her daily allowance of sweets would sink a ferry-boat."

TEACH CHILDREN TO DRAW

Making School a Pleasure to the Average Child

The modern idea of education is that it is a process whose object is to "bring out" and "bring up" the best of the qualities and abilities that are lying dormant in the child. This has had a wonderful effect in making school a pleasure to the average child, and in most cases at the present day it could not be said that they go "unwillingly."

The latter-day method is especially shown in the teaching of drawing to young children. Instead of being forced to copy a collection of uninteresting models which do not in the least appeal to their ideas, either of interest or beauty, the attempt is made to draw them along the natural lines of their own abilities and teach them to improve their innate and intuitive powers. It is to be borne in mind that all children draw, but the tendency is apt to be cramped and destroyed by too early attempts to introduce mere technical teaching.

The Stomach Needs Help

The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels Must Be Kept Active to Ensure Health

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Not one person in a hundred can get along at this time of year, without using something to enliven the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels.

Too much eating of heavy artificial foods, too little outdoor exercise, this is the explanation.

The liver and kidneys are overworked in their efforts to remove the poisonous waste matter from the system. They fail and become torpid and clogged. The bowels become constipated and stomach derangements follow.

There is one medicine which will overcome this condition more certainly and more quickly than any other, and this is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

This medicine gets the bowels in action at once and by awakening the liver and kidneys ensures the thorough cleansing of the filtering and excretory systems.

With the poisonous obstructions removed, the digestive system resumes its healthful condition, appetite improves, pains and aches disappear as well as irritability and depression.

You cannot imagine a more satisfactory treatment for biliousness, constipation, backache and kidney disease than Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Household Economy

How to Have the Best Cough Syrup and Save $2, by Making It at Home.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. If you take two cups of granulated sugar, add one cup of warm water, and stir about 2 minutes, you have as good syrup as money could buy.

If you will then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup, you will have as much cough syrup as you could buy ready-made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly.

And you will find it the best cough syrup you ever used—even in whooping cough. You can feel it take hold—usually stops the most severe cough in 24 hours. It is just laxative enough, has a good tonic effect and taste is pleasant. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

It is a splendid remedy, too, for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, etc.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guaiacol and all the healing pine elements. No other preparation will work in this formula.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup is now used and prized in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has often been imitated but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

RESENTED QUESTIONS

A Mother Who Thought the Parson Was Too Inquisitive

At the close of a christening ceremony in a certain church the interested parties, as usual, repaired to the vestry.

While the curate was entering the names in the register, one good lady appeared to think that he was asking a number of unnecessary questions.

When her turn came she stepped up to the table with the avowed intention to "staud no himperence."

"Father's name?" asked the clergyman, without raising his eyes from the register.

"John Smith."

"Calling?"

"No, 'e ain't."

"Excuse me," ejaculated the curate, in mild surprise. "I said his calling."

"An' I sez 'e ain't," snapped the old lady. "'E's a 'awker right enough, but 'e ain't callin', cos 'e's deaf an' dumb. An' now, mister, mebbe you'll mind your own business, an' I'll mind mine."

And it took half a dozen people as many minutes to convince the lady of her mistake.

A REAL WATER CYCLE

A Newly Devised Form of Locomotion in Germany

German sporting circles are excited over the possibilities of a newly devised form of locomotion for use on water, termed the "hydrocycle." It is of exceedingly simple construction. A couple of parallel, pointed, water-tight tubes of galvanized iron, 10½ feet in length, are attached to each other 2½ feet apart. A light framework supports a seat. Beneath this is a pair of pedals, the motion of which is communicated to propeller blades. A handle-bar in front of the seat is connected with a rudder. The traveller using this novel craft, by a pedal action identical with that of the ordinary bicycle, moves easily over the surface of the water, and alters his direction promptly at will. He has an advantage over the rower in facing forward, as does a canoe paddler. The total weight of a one-seated hydrocycle is 66 pounds. The inventor, an Austrian (Herr Fr. Kaspar), attains a speed of six to seven miles per hour. The new craft offers an agreeable variation from ordinary rowing for use on inland waters and along the seashore.

PAY THEIR OWN LIGHT BILL

Novel Method of Making "Late Birds Pay the Piper"

Some of the smaller European towns of economical habits have been complaining because they are obliged to light their streets all night for the benefit of a few belated citizens and have been trying to discover a method whereby the citizen who needs to have his pathway lighted in the small hours of the night shall pay the costs himself. In one of the girders of a small German town such a system has actually been put into operation. The street is a little over half a mile long, and is provided with nine lamps. At each end of the street is a penny-in-the-slot machine, and whenever anyone wishes to light up the street, he has merely to drop in a ten pfennig piece, which turns on the current for twelve minutes. This allows him ample time to walk the length of the street. The street is normally lighted until 10 o'clock. Thereafter the pre payment meter must be resorted to.

A DOG GUIDE THROUGH CLIFFS

"Major," a Curly-Haired Retriever, Could Even Open Small Iron Gates

The river Cynfal rises in North Merioneth, Scotland, at an altitude of nearly fourteen hundred feet, and as its whole course is not much over eleven miles from the source to the point where it joins the gentle Dwyrid, in the Festiniog valley, it will be at once understood that the stream has an impetuous course from start to finish. The most romantic point on the river is to be found at the famous Cynfal Falls, near the small town of Festiniog, which is in itself a beauty spot in this romantic district.

We called at the Abbey Arms, writes T. M. Hardie, to inquire about the footpath leading to the falls, and Mr. Jones, the courteous landlord, at once commenced to give direction as to a gate in a farmyard at the end of the street. By that time he was in the roadway, and suddenly said—"But I will send the dog with you." Then he uttered a short sentence in Welsh to a black, curly-haired retriever, with beautiful eyes and a most intelligent face. "Major" at once with joyful alacrity responded to the call, and began barking so excitedly as to quickly bring out every other dog in the village. However, peace being restored, the Major led the way, and the small procession started.

The falls are about a mile from the village, and this remarkable and most lovable dog has been trained to act as guide. He carries out his task with great skill, and the thoroughness and energy of every movement provoked much amusement. Along the footpath there are several small iron gates, and, with one exception, the Major can open them. The one he cannot manage has a spring latch, which is beyond his reach. When the noise of the cataract reached our ears the guide, who had disappeared for a short time in order that he might enjoy a bath by the wayside, led us down a side path and left us in front of the lower fall, where the water has a sheer descent of 40 feet. In order that the scene may be thoroughly enjoyed, a bridge has been thrown over the chasm.

On the one side the torrent is pouring over the face of the rock, and the air is saturated with the spray from below. On the other, one can look down to the depths of the gorge and observe the water stealing away between the narrow ledges of rock. The sight is awe-inspiring, and one holds on to the bridge with no uncertain grip. When the party began to retrace their steps we found the Major did not return to the original path, but trotted up a smaller one for a short distance, and then stopped opposite a columnar rock, standing high out of the river, and locally known as "Hugh Lloyd's Pulpit"—a place where, in former days, a wizard was nightly wont to recite his incantations.

We were again following up the Major—eagerly I may say—for we were filled with expectation as to where our canine friend would lead us next. "Next" we found was "The Goat's Leap," a jutting rock with something of the shape of a natural bridge. At this point the gorge widens out a little, and the Major had trotted down a side path and stood beside the river. From the point where we stood there was nothing apparently to be gained by going down, but we reckoned without our host, for we were breaking faith with the guide, who, perceiving that we were leaving out a part of the programme, fell to barking in such a furious manner that we went down in order to pacify him. Having crossed the river, our guide led us up the left bank, and soon we came in sight of what, in some respects, was the grandest sight of all, viz., the upper falls, where the river pours its flood in three great leaps, foaming, into a dark basin overshadowed by the adjoining rocks. A rustic seat at this point provided an agreeable resting-place, where the sandwiches were enjoyed, and where also sat the Major, who had a share of what was going, and well deserved it.

POTTING BULBS

Bulbs Forced to Bloom Too Soon Become Weakly

The majority of amateurs do not attempt to induce bulbs in pots to flower till well into spring. Much the greatest number bloom in March and April. The advantage of this is that no expense is gone to in forcing, and when the flowers do appear at that season they are in the best possible form and profuse in huge blooms, brilliant colors, and lovely fragrance. Bulbs that are forced to bloom at Christmas and mid-winter under the not first-rate conditions owned by amateurs are usually weakly but retard them to the spring and every quality they possess will be got out of them gloriously. They are all best done before any growth begins. They ought to be kept cool and quiet previously. Hyacinths are often potted singly in three, four or five inch pots. Tulips, narcissi, and others are generally potted in groups. Their style of growth and blooming adapts them to this arrangement. One tulip or daffodil in a small pot is not attractive, but have them in little clusters and they are charming. The pots should all be drained, filled closely up with somewhat rich, gritty soil, the bulbs pushed in till only their crowns are peeping, and then make the soil very firm between them. They should then be placed in the open air or in a cool frame soaked with water. Keep cool and exposed for a week, and then cover over with fine coal ashes to the depth of a foot. Sand may be used in the place of ashes or cocoanut fibre, but ashes are generally obtainable, and suit quite well. They must not be exposed to frost, but they should be kept cool.

HUNTING FOR ROCK CRYSTAL

A Dangerous and Laborious Work—For Whole Hours the Searchers Climb and Climb

One of the most dangerous and laborious of callings is that of the rock crystal searcher. It has attained much greater importance since rock crystal came to be used in optical work. But for generations past, the Swiss have pursued this business in their mountains. Rock crystal, which is pure silica, or crystallized quartz, is found on a large scale, of varying fineness and coloring, sometimes separate, sometimes in deposits. The crystal hunters are known as "strainer" and the crystal as "strahler" (luminous rays). The outfit of a "strahler" consists of a bar of iron, four feet long and hooked at the end, of a shovel, a mattock, a strong rope, and a leather bag. Thus equipped, he sets out in the morning to search for the rock crystal. He is almost always alone, so that he may not have to share his booty. For whole hours he climbs and climbs, mounting the sides of the rocks on ledges a few inches wide, over yawning abysses and frightful precipices. Finally, he perceives a vein of quartz, which he makes an effort to reach. The nails on his shoes no longer hold on the sloping ground. As soon as he begins to walk, the ground breaks away; he cannot get ahead. Patiently, without a word of vexation, without an angry gesture, because the "strahler" has learned that these are useless, he returns to seek another route, for there is no open road that leads to these inhospitable regions; it is necessary to pick a convenient place for each step in advance, and very often, the roughness not being sufficient for progress, the crystal hunter has to cut, with his mattock, climbing steps in the rock. Finally the vein is reached; he follows it, striking with the hammer. The sound returned indicates to his skilled ear the existence of a cavern, a geode, or pocket, which are the names given in Switzerland to the hollows where the crystals are found, attached to the sides, or detached and mingled with sand.

Last year, a strahler, on St. Gothard, made a lucky discovery of large crystals. A hundred yards below the line of external snow he saw a vein of quartz about 40 yards long and 15 yards wide. But on this day it was impossible to reach the vein, for at the moment of its discovery darkness began to envelop the mountain. He passed the night in a hut, a half-hour's journey away. Unfortunately, in the morning, in place of the bright sunshine for which he had hoped, thick clouds of fog covered the sky. He had to beat a retreat, and return as quickly as possible to the valley. The winter came, and the treasure he had caught a glimpse of did not allow him a moment's rest; he counted the days that must pass before the return of spring and the melting of the snow. Finally, the day so long awaited arrived, and one fine morning he took up his route, with one of his colleagues. Having re-located the vein, they exploded a mine to open the hollow and penetrate into the secret cavern, at the risk of being crushed by the falling rocks. In short, they finished by collecting more than three hundred quintals of crystal, which they had all the trouble in the world to carry away, at the expense of several successive journeys. And this, for the one who had been so lucky as to first discover this vein, was a veritable little fortune, which he employed in setting up a well-equipped inn.

Rock crystal is also found in the Dauphine, in Piedmont, and imbedded in Carrara marble. East India, too, furnishes fine specimens, likewise North America. This material was highly prized in former times and worked up, as it still is sometimes, into seals, cups, and vases with finely executed gold mountings. Owing to its hardness it is less liable to be scratched than glass, and is therefore extensively used for lenses of spectacles, etc.

A GLASGOW INCIDENT

There was a fine type of old Scotswoman among the witnesses at the High Court in Glasgow. She was deaf, and her Doric was delightful, though Lord Dewar seemed to find some difficulty in understanding parts of it. No one however, laughed more than his Lordship when the old lady, replying to counsel's suggestion that her age was 76, said "79," but, observing that there was some confusion, she lightly added, "Oh, is't ma age? I thoct it was the number o' ma close ye wantit."

"SLEEPLESSNESS."

Thousands of people all over this land toss night after night on a sleepless pillow. The eyes do not close in the refreshing slumber that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right.

Some are troubled with weak and smothering spells; others palpitation of the heart; others have their nerves unhinged; but whatever the cause—it comes entirely from a derangement of either the heart or nerves, or both. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound, refreshing slumber. They do this by their invigorating effect on the heart and nerves and will tone up the whole system to perfect condition.

Mr. H. Jewel, Keswick, Ont., writes: "I am glad to have the pleasure of telling you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I would have weak spells, seemed to lose my breath, and would have to get up in the night as I could not sleep. I tried many medicines but found nothing good until I used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took three boxes and it is three years ago since I did so, and I haven't been troubled since."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"A Maiden And A Mouse"

By W. J. Crosbie

that quickly. Suddenly it came to him that some little way ahead was a tavern—the "White Hart"—where possibly he might be able to obtain a remount.

But he was doomed to disappointment. The only horse in the stable of the "White Hart" was in a sorry plight having the very day fallen sick of a fever. So said mine host as he shrewdly eyed the black-haired, frowning stranger.

"Come, my friend," quoth Orgill impatiently, "what of your neighbors?—have they no horses?"

The other scratched his head; and then, "To be sure," he drawled, "Farmer Ridley has a fine four-year-old—"

"Eating his head off in the stable, I warrant?" interrupted Orgill, producing an apparently well-lined purse.

"Maybe, your Honour; but—"

"No but, Master Landlord! I need a nag, and"—opening his purse—"I am no niggard when well served."

The landlord's small, deep-set eyes twinkled at the sight of the gold, and beckoning the ostler, who was standing near, he proceeded to give him th eneedful instructions.

Orgill—generous whenever it served his purposes—tossed a guinea to the fellow, who deftly catching it, slipped it into his pocket with a grin. "Another when you return with the horse"; and so saying, he entered the common room of the tavern.

Now, in the circumstances—despite his belief that no Royalist could penetrate his disguise—Master Richard Orgill was feeling decidedly uneasy. But not for long. Presently, having supped on a mutton pasty, crisp white bread, and toothsome cheese, he settled himself in a high-backed chair before the fire, and, with a tankard of ale at his elbow, began to laugh at his fears. A fico for the Royalists! Richard Orgill had brains that could outwit the cleverest; and, if need be, he had a skill in swordplay that could baffle any two of them. T othe devil with them, one and all! And with this pious wish, he began to nod drowsily to the leaping flames.

Ten minutes sped on, until at length he became alive to the fact that he had been dozing. The fire had burned low, and springing to his feet, he hastened from the room, and summoned the landlord. The ostler had not yet returned, and mine host was profuse in his apologies. With an oath Orgill strode out into the darkness and the driving rain. He listened, and to his relief heard the rhythmical hoof-beats of a galloping horse. On the threshold of the tavern he impatiently awaited the arrival of the horseman, doubting not that he was the ostler. But presently to his chagrin and disquietude he perceived by the light thrown from the doorway that the rider was not the man he looked for, but a Cavalier.

Returning to the room he resumed his seat, and, to prepare for a possible emergency, examined the priming of his pistol, and loosened his sword in the scabbard. But one thing he did not do. Ignorant of the fact that his wig was awry, he omitted to adjust it.

A step sounded in the hall-way; then, with a careless swing of his shapely shoulders, the newcomer entered the room.

The rakish, white-plumed beaver, the jewelled sword-hilt, half hidden by the rich purple cloak, the riding boots adorned with silver spurs—all these Orgill noted at a glance. Whereupon, "Bah!" he said to himself, "a boy, and a popinjay to boot!"

Fair-haired, blue-eyed, with a complexion pure and fresh as that of a country maiden, the youth made a pleasing picture as, smiling and debonnair, he gave the other greeting.

"A foul night, sir, for a ride," quoth Orgill, rising to his feet. "Yet 'fore Gad I envy you."

"Envy me, indeed!" rejoined the youth pleasantly. "And prithee, why?" Because of my wet cloak, that is like to become wetter ere my journey is at an end?"

"Pooh, sir! That is but a small matter. I envy you because you are a fully equipped Cavalier. For myself, I am without a horse, and a Cavalier without a horse is like a rapier without a point of little use." And thereupon he acquainted the stranger of his mishap, finishing his recital by heartily cursing the absent ostler for his tardiness.

After a brief pause. "Pardon me, sir," said he; "are you a Charlton of Charlton Manor?"

"Nay. Neither a Charlton nor a Bainbridge, though Bainbridge I would fain be called."

"I am highly pleased to make your acquaintance, Master—Bainbridge," said Orgill with a bow. "Dick Calvert at your service."

The youth returned the bow in silence.

"To Hatton."

"I perceive; a recruit for His Majesty. Good luck t'ye, Master Bainbridge!" Raising his tankard, "May your sword never fail you in the hour of need."

"I thank you, sir," said Bainbridge modestly. "Having long wished to serve the King, I resolved this day to join the Royalist force now at Hatton and as my father refused his consent—"

"You came without it. Bravo, my lad! You are made of the right stuff. With that good sword of yours you will yet carve your way to fortune."

To the youth's reply he gave but little heed; for it had suddenly occurred to him that close at hand was a horse—doubtless a good one—already saddled and bridled. Why tarry longer? And as he asked himself the question he set the tankard upon the table, and for a second or two stood in the attitude of listening. "Hark!" said he, "there is a horseman upon the road. Mayhap, 'tis that cursed ostler."

"You have sharp ears, Master Calvert. I hear naught but the rain and the whistling of thewind."

Without replying, Orgill (to give him his true name) strode towards the door. As he did so, he became aware that his ruse was doomed to fail; for here was Bainbridge close upon his heels.

"You were right after all, Master Calvert," said the young Cavalier quietly, as they stood by the threshold of the outer door. "Here comes your horse." And sure enough there was the ostler riding in from the roadway.

Mine host now appeared; and five minutes later Orgill, flinging the servant the promised guinea, sprang into the saddle, and hastened to overtake Bainbridge, who was already upon the highroad.

The converse of the two men as they rode together in the moonlight was for the most part one-sided, Orgill entertaining his companion with a recital of deeds of derring-do which he said he had wrought during the campaign. Lies they were, and they rolled glibly off his tongue until the cross-roads were reached.

In front of the tall sign-post they drew rein. "Here we part," said Orgill. "You way lies to the left; mine—"

He paused, for Bainbridge's pistol was levelled at his head.

"Your way, my friend, lies to the left also. Move hand or foot and I pull the trigger!"

Orgill laughed a trifle uneasily. "And this be a joke 'tis a sorry one." And as he spake his right hand stole downwards towards his pistol. "Come, young sir, what means it?"

"It means that you are my prisoner—"

The word died on his lips. Orgill's arm had suddenly straightened; there was a flash, a report, and the bullet whistled harmlessly over Bainbridge's head.

Orgill, swinging his horse to the rightabout, drove in the spurs; the animal reared, then broke into a gallop.

Bainbridge made no attempt to follow—horse and rider seemed like a piece of statuary. Suddenly raising his pistol he fired. "Missed," he cried despairingly, his gaze rivetted on the fleeing horseman.

For a space Orgill kept his seat, then, nodding like a drowsy man, he sank slowly forward and rolled from the saddle. Instantly the horse came to a standstill, and tossing his head glanced around, as in wonder, at his late rider, who lay motionless, one foot entangled in the stirrup.

"My God!" cried Bainbridge, "I have killed him." And he cast down his pistol as though it had scorched him. As he did so he heard the rapid beat of horse hoofs and jingling of accoutrements, and glancing up the Hatton road, beheld a troop of Cavaliers advancing at a gallop.

Dismounting he threw the reins across the horse's neck, and walked towards the motionless figure upon the road. But ere he reached it he turned, and, utterly unnerved, faced the horsemen shrinkingly, as if he feared they were about to ride him down.

"What is this?" cried the foremost Captain Landon by name—reining in his horse with a jerk. "What have we here?" Glancing at the prostrate figure: "'Fore Gad!" said he, "'tis a Cavalier!" Turning his gaze upon Bainbridge, "Sir, your explanation!"

With twitching lips the youth essayed to speak, but no words followed.

The other eyed him with a deepening suspicion, and a degree of contempt. He turned to one of the troopers. "Arkwright," he said, "arrest that man!" And he pointed sternly towards Bainbridge, who, like a person but half awake, forthwith handed over his sword and remaining pistol.

"Now, sir," demanded Landon, "what is your name? and who is the man you have shot?"

"He is a Roundhead in disguise. He has stolen the King's letter. Search him, I pray you."

CHAPTER III.

In the best room in the farmhouse where he had taken up his quarters, sat General S——, ruddy-faced and genial, a soldier every inch of him.

"What a handsome boy!" he said to himself as he fixed his eyes upon Bainbridge who stood before him, nervously fingering his beaver. Aloud he said: "I have heard of your exploit, Master Bainbridge. (Pray be seated.) Also, Captain Landon has handed me His Majesty's letter. The man who shot Cornet Winram, and whom you so cleverly outwitted, proves to be Richard Orgill, the notorious renegade. Poor Winram! I trust his wound is not a serious one. He lies in Elmleigh Hall, I understand. To-morrow I will ride there; he will be pleased to hear what has happened.

"And now, Master Bainbridge," he went on, "permit me to congratulate and thank you for the signal service you have rendered to our cause. I trust you will join us. I can offer you a cornetcy; there is a vacancy just now in Captain Landon's troop."

"I thank you, sir," said Bainbridge in a low voice; "but I cannot accept your offer."

Judging by the expression on the General's face, this was hardly the answer he expected.

"I am sorry," he said. "We need such men as you.—Will nothing tempt you?"

"Nothing, sir."

"Remember, there is a brilliant career open to you. His Majesty—despite what his enemies may say—never forgets those who have served him well."

"Again, sir, I thank you; but I cannot alter my decision."

"Well, well, so be it. And now we will drink His Majesty's health." From the floor he lifted to the table a small hamper of rare old wine.

"I have here"—he began, and then he stopped suddenly. For as he raised the lid, out from the hamper sprang a mouse. Instantly, with a faint scream, Bainbridge rose to his feet; then sat down again, and lay back with closed eyes.

"By heaven! 'tis a woman," muttered the General, amazement and consternation depicted on his weather-beaten face, as with nervous fingers he began to unfasten the cloak at the neck.

The girl's bosom softly rose and fell, the blue eyes slowly unclosed; whereon the General, turning away, hastened to pour somewine into a cup.

"Forgive me," he said, and though he knew it not, his voice had softened. "I was thoughtless. I ought to have known that you were weary, hungry perchance." He paused; and in silence the girl took the cup from his hand.

Her secret, she knew, was a secret no longer. His voice and manner told her as much. "General S——," she began falteringly, "you spoke just now of Elmleigh Hall." She paused. "That is my home," she added, and the long lashes fell upon her cheeks.

"Your home!" he cried in sheer bewilderment. "Then you are—"

"Sir Geoffrey Marston's daughter." The old soldier bowed. "I am betrothed to Philip Winram."

"My child," he said kindly, "your secret is safe with me. Cornet Winram shall be told to-morrow of the capture of Orgill—by a cavalry picket."

"I thank you," she said simply. Then pleadingly, "Oh, sir, you do not think me unmaidenly?"

"I think you are the sweetest, bravest, noblest lady I ever had the good fortune to meet. Were you my daughter this would be the proudest moment of my life. Permit me!" And, stooping, he kissed her hand with old-time gallantry.

And now, in haste to go, Laura gratefully but firmly declined his offer of refreshment and an escort. And so once more she rode through the moonlight. Meanwhile the General, sitting over his wine, drank several toasts. And the first was not "The King!" but "Mistress Laura Marston!"

* * * * * *

Not until a twelvemonth after his wedding day did Philip Winram learn the truth concerning the discovery of the King's letter.

Of the varied emotions that thrilled him while Laura told the story, and of the converse that followed, no need is there for me to write.

"And so, Sweet Heart," he said at length, "'twas for my sake you faced all those perils?"

"Nay, sir," said she; "for the King's sake."

"Happy King!" and he laughed good-humoredly. Then very softly he said, his arm stealing around her waist, "My brave, true-hearted little woman."

"Brave!" she cried. "Nay, dear, I was a coward. I was afraid of the darkness, and of that poor wretch, Orgill. And, oh, Philip, that horrid mouse!"

"Consumption"

Three Doctors Attended Her. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup Cured Her.

It has long been known that the balsamic odor of the newly cut pine tree heals and invigorates the lungs and consumptivrs improve and revive amid the perfume of the pines. Since but few can command the luxury of a visit to the pineries, it will be good news to many to know that the essential healing principle of the pine has been separated, and refined, and combined with other absorbent, expectorant and soothing medicines of recognized worth in the manufacture of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Mrs. Charles McDermott, Bathurst, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and let you know the benefit I have received through the use of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Three years ago I had Consumption and had three doctors attending me, and they were very much alarmed about my condition. I was so weak and miserable I could not do my housework. While looking through your B.B.B. almanac I saw that Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was good for weak lungs so I got a bottle and after taking ten bottles I was completely cured. At that time I weighed 135 pounds and now weigh 172 a gain of 37 pounds in three years. I will keep it in the house all the time and would not be without it for anything as I owe my life to it."

The increases in Assurances in force, in Cash Income, and in Assets, were never equalled by any Canadian Life Assurance Company in any year.

The great success of the Company is not confined to Canada alone, but its vast business and important connections in other lands are doing yeoman service in greatly enhancing the prestige of this country abroad, and in bringing home large sums for investment.

1.—Dickory, Dickory Dock.
The Mouse ran up the Clock.
And what do you think Jack and Jill did? Why, sent the Cat that had just been playing the fiddle after her, to be sure.

2.—And I'll tell you, She just screwed as large as a house,
To the weak little, sleek little, poor little mouse.

3.—Well open flew the clock door, over fell the clock,
And Jack and Jill ran screaming, little victims of a shock.

4.—Oh, my, but those little tots were scared. To make matters worse, old Mother Hubbard raced after them. My, but that old lady was a mad old lady. She owned that clock.

5.—As for Jack and Jill, it seemed almost as if they would get away, when—well, look at the picture. The man all tattered and torn was taking a quiet snooze, when——
Over him, hair over, head over heels,
They tripped, and goeubilitzed a what squeals!

6.—And then, I tell you, they were in for it. Old Mother Hubbard was mad because of the clock; old tattered and torn because of the snooze.
And Jack and Jill and Jill and Jack
Are in for a fac' for a whack, whack, whack!

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—This Tiny Tad appears to be afflicted in some way.
"What is the matter?" ask his mates. "I'm hurt," you hear him say.

3—"I saw a Buffalobus, and I guess I went too near;
For, anyhow, he hooked me, and I cannot walk, I fear."

3—"We'll carry you," his mates reply, and pretty soon they find
A Wheelbarrhododendson, quite a nice one of its kind.

4—They put him in and prop him up and trundle him to camp.
And set him on a bundle of straw to keep him from the damp.

5—Then to a Buttercupboard goes an enterprising Tad.
And gets some nice spaghetti which he gives the injured lad.

6—"I'm hungry!" cries the invalid. "I'll eat without a spoon;
It may not be spaghettiquet, but I must have this soon."

A sleigh load of young people from Bethel drove over to attend the 'Seven' social under the auspices of the League on Friday night.

The box social given by the congregation of the R .C. church proved to be a grand success. A very acceptable programme was presented by the children, while the bidding for the boxes proved very exciting. Mr. A. Wilson, as auctioneer, appeared quite in his element, and the boxes, were easily disposed of, some of them bringing a handsome sum. The committee in charge are to be congratulated on the success which attended their efforts.

TEACHER'S NERVES

Teachers often have the reputation of being cross when the trouble is with the nerves rather than the disposition. Mr. A Sutherland, Principal South Bar School, Sydney, N.S., writes: "I was nervous and worried, had indigestion and headache and other ills. Doctors failed me. You can depend on me to recommend Dr. A. W Chase's Nerve Food for I believe it has entirely cured me." Tired brains and feeble nerves are soon restored by this celebrated food cure.

May Use Dynamite.

Halifax, March 9.—It may be necessary to use dynamite to open Sydney harbor to navigation. The ice in the harbor is nearly sixteen inches in thickness, but the real obstacle is an ice barrier which has formed across the mouth of the harbor, and which is now about sixteen feet thick. The dynamiting of this huge mass of ice is now being considered. Sea captains say that it can be moved in no other way. It would take a whole summer's sun to melt it. Very few people have any idea of the quantity and thickness of the ice on the coast. A sea captain told a Canadian Press reporter that in some places the ice has piled tier upon tier until it reached the great height of something like sixty feet.

Celebrate King's Birthday.

Ottawa, March 9.—A circular from Downing street, London, announces to the Government "that it is the wish of His Majesty the King that his birthday should be officially celebrated in his dominions beyond the seas on the actual date of the anniversary, viz., June 3rd."

His Majesty has also consented to an amendment to the regulations to provide for royal salutes being fired on:

(a) The anniversaries of the birth, accession, and coronation of the reigning sovereign;

(b) The birthday of the consort of the reigning sovereign;

(c) The birthday of the Queen Mother.

Germany Warns Vatican.

Berlin, March 9.—In a speech before the Diet yesterday, Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg admonished the Curia that a persistence in the recent tendency to the issuance of decrees affecting Germany without previous consultation with the Government would lead to retaliation.

The chancellor announced that teachers taking the oath of anti-modernism would not be permitted in the future to teach history or German in the middle schools. The Government likewise, he said, would consider the matter of the oath-taking when filling other state posts.

Son Owns the Farm.

St. Catharines, March 9.—Mr. Justice Middleton yesterday afternoon gave judgment for the plaintiff in the action of Alfred Finbow, a Beamsville farmer, who sought to have his father dispossessed of any claim in the farm, worth $9,000, they both live upon. Finbow and his father took over the farm in 1895, the father giving up a mercantile business in Grand Valley. There was only a verbal agreement but letters were produced by the father to indicate that it had been a joint purchase. Some time ago the son got married and he told his parents and sisters to get a home for themselves.

Was a Consenting Party.

Bowmanville, March 9.—McManus and Brown, the two men who were arrested by Chief Jarvis last Wednesday, charged with criminal assault on Mrs. Bradley of Clarke Township, appeared before Magistrate Horsey yesterday morning. They were acquitted on the first charge, Mrs. Bradley admitting that she was a consenting party. They pleaded guilty to the charge of assault on Mr. Bradley and were sentenced to two months in prison at hard labor. McManus was also bound over in $1,500 bond to keep the peace for twelve months.

Tea Time Talks

The Healthfulness of Tea

Physicians who often forbid the use of Coffee and Cocoa to the well, prescribe tea for the sick. Of the three, tea is the only beverage that can be drunk for a lifetime without injurious effects. It is a harmless tonic—a gentle stimulant without reaction.

As tea is the most desirable beverage, so "Salada" is tea in its most desirable form.

"Salada" Ceylon Tea comes from tea plant to tea pot untouched by human hands, from the time the leaves fall into the picker's baskets. Its delicate aroma and delicious flavor are perfectly preserved in sealed, air-tight packages.

Yearly Sales Over 20,000,000 Packages

"The Strange Case Of Eleanor Cuyler"

By KINGSLAND CROSBY

The driver sprang to his perch, seized the reins, and the whip whistled through the air as his astonished horse whirled around and started off. Into Pennsylvania Avenue the cab turned, and dashed over its smooth, hot asphalt, passnig cable-cars jammed with Government clerks on their way to work, swaying to avoid running down careless, easy-going pedestrians, barely skimming the bicycles of messenger boys, avoiding collision with waggons by a hair's breadth. Around another corner to the right, up a steep incline, another turn to the left, and the panting, sweating horse was pulled back on his haunches before the hotel.

It was the slowest month of the slowest season in the year. Official Washington, diplomatic Washington, social Washington, had shut up shop weeks previous, and had fled to the Adirondacks, to Maine, to Newport, to the Great Lakes, to Europe—anywhere to escape the enervating, life-sapping heat of the National Capital. The President alone had remained longer than usual, conscientiously insistent upon disposing of laborious details connected with the executive office. Consequently the hotel corridors were empty, and before the momentary commotion made by the cab arrival had subsided a porter and a bellboy were hurrying down the steps. Cuyler tossed his cabman half-a-dollar, let go of his satchel and umbrella—which were caught respectively by the porter and the bellboy before they touched the pavement—and entered the dim, cool, airy corridor.

The room-clerk on duty in the office recognized him before he was fairly off the street, and spoke to the manager, who quickly stepped around in front to meet and greet this distinguished person. The Clerk forbore to get pen and ink ready for use. Cuyler seldom registered. The manager, smiling cordially, began a welcome, but was cut short.

"Any message for me?" the banker demanded.

"Yes, sir—a long-distance telephone Here it is. I took it off the wire myself. From your office at 8.30 this morning, sent by Johnson—your secretary, isn't he?

Cuyler did not take the trouble to reply. He grasped the bit of paper from the hotel man's fingers and silently read the message thereon: "Not a clue as yet. Johnson."

"Anything else?"

"No, sir—nothing."

"I'll go to my room," said Cuyler, stepping toward the elevator. Then without pausing, he added, "Have breakfast ready in twenty-five minutes—canteloupe, poached eggs, coffee, hot corn-bread. . . . And all the New York papers," he concluded as the car shot up the shaft.

"Very good, sir," the hotel man replied, his voice floating up after the car.

Mortimer Cuyler, refreshed by a quick shower, came down again on the minute and walked into the cafe below the street level. His breakfast was ready. Two men had been detailed to look after his wants, known, unknown; probable, possible, impossible. The cantaloupe, ice-cold and faintly fragrant, lay before him. Out in the kitchens a chef was poaching eggs every three minutes, so that when called for, two of them would be exactly ready for serving—not overcooked by so much as a second. One serving-man stood a yard from the banker's shoulder; the other as far distant in a different direction. Neither looked at him or at each other; but their nerves were strained to anticipate his every wish.

The newly-arrived guest tasted of the melon, then picked up the New York morning newspapers, which lay close by and rapidly scanned the headlines, discarding one after another as he failed to find that for which he was looking. He had just finished close study of the Herald's came from the office and into the down from the office and into the cafe, followed leisurely by a dignified, elderly man—white hair and moustache, linen suit, low shoes—who carried a sealed envelope in one hand, his straw hat in the other.

"Mr Cuyler, sir," the bellboy inquired, with deep respect and as the banker looked up he added, "A White House Messenger, sir."

Cuyler took the envelope and drew from it a sheet of paper bearing the simple blue lettering of White House stationery. The note had been written but a few minutes previous, and read as follows:

Dear Mr. Cuyler,—The President duly received your telegram of last evening, saying you would arrive in Washington early to-day. The President directs me to say that he would be very glad indeed to see you in the Executive Mansion, and suggests that you call before eleven o'clock, rather than later, if the time mentioned suits your convenience.

Very truly yours,
Lehigh Alberts,
Secretary to the President.

Cuyler glanced at his watch.

"Tell the messenger there is no reply," he said to the bellboy, rising from his chair and laying aside his napkin.

"Are you ready for the coffee and eggs, sir?" a waiter inquired.

"I've had enough," the guest answered, stepping across the cafe and into a writing-room, where was a public telephone station.

The young woman at the switchboard did not trouble herself to look up from the novel she was reading as Cuyler approached.

"What number?" she said languidly, turning over a page.

"Six Thousand, Main."

The operator awoke with a start.

"Main, Six Thousand!" she called into the transmitter.

Eight seconds flashed by.

"Booth Number Two!" she added quickly. "The White House is on the wire!"

The connection was practically instantaneous, as it always is with the White House, which, with its sixty telegraph wires and half that number of telephone cables, takes precedence over everything else in despatch of messages.

Cuyler entered the booth and picked up the receiver.

"Mr. Alberts?" he inquired. "Yes. This is Mr. Cuyler. Your note is just at hand. Tell the President I'll be over in fifteen minutes. . . . . Thank you . . . . Good-by."

There had been a heavy shower before day-break, of that morning, but already every drop had disappeared from the baking asphalt and brick pavements. The few persons whom Cuyler met, as he strode along the streets, were walking slowly; and the gardeners in the public grounds were leisurely going about their work. But he kept up his rapid gait, and in a few minutes reached his destination.

Passing through the White House grounds and arriving at the historic building itself, Cuyler mounted the steps leading to the floor whereon were situated the Executive offices and the living rooms of the President's family.

At the head of the stairway stood the President's doorkeeper, guarding the entrance to the Cabinet-room, and he saluted the financier, recognising him at a glance.

"Would you be so kind as to step into the secretary's office?" the doorkeeper said. "The President is engaged just now."

"Certainly," Cuyler replied, mounting two steps to the left, and passing along a corridor. One one side of the passageway were rooms filled with clerks and accountants; on the other the large, square office of the President's secretary, and beyond this the narrow, noisy, busy telegraph-room.

When the banker stepped into the office of Mr. Alberts he found half a dozen men, and a few women there ahead of him, all hoping to have an interview with the President; some had definite reason for seeing the Chief Executive, but the majority were merely "hand-shakers." One man, who looked like an upState political leader, was standing close to the President's secretary, in the centre of the room, talking in low, earnest tones. The other visitors were seated here and there, and all appeared to be interested as Alberts quickly stepped forward to greet the new arrival: for they recognized the banker's shoulders and heavy jaws, and those piercing eyes.

"Can you wait a few moments, Mr. Cuyler?" the secretary inquired. "The President is engaged, but I will tell him you are here."

"Certainly—kindly request him not to put anything aside. I would prefer to wait, as my call may take half an hour."

"Very good, sir," Alberts responded, turning and walking through another door at the end of his office.

Two men were chatting in undertone by a window as Cuyler sat down and a veteran of the Civil War, with one leg gone, nudged the white-haired little woman by his side, as they, too, saw who the newcomer was. The prosperous-looking men by the window exchanged swift glances—each noted instantly Cuyler's haggard face—and their minds flew to Wall street.

What was going to happen?

What had brought to the White House, in the hottest weather of the year, one of the great bankers of the world?

Could it be possible that another issue of the Government bonds was imminent? There had been hints of such a contingency, and Cuyler was the one man in the country to whom the President would turn in an emergency of the kind. Or were American investments in some out-of-the-way corner of the world suddenly imperilled? Surely something was up—something serious, judging from the circles under Cuyler's eyes, and the deep lines about his mouth.

A door near one corner of the room was suddenly opened, and a well-known Representative came out, closely followed by the President, who bowed to those present, and extended his hand to the latest arrival, saying:

"Mr. Cuyler—good morning. I'm glad to see you—"

The door closed again as he and the banker disappeared in the Cabinet-room, which the President then used as his office. This morning, however, the Nation's Chief Executive did not pause there, but led the way into the circular library, just beyond, where he and his visitor seated themselves.

"I'm glad to see you!" the President repeated cordially.

"I'm glad to be here, Mr. President," said Cuyler. "I want your help in an important matter—in a most important matter."

The President always was dignified, and now he became grave, serious. His eyes did not lose their habitual calm, but sprang alight with eagerness to assist a political supporter, an old personal friend.

"For years, Mr. Cuyler," he said earnestly, "you have been a bulwark of strength to me, an unfailing inspiration—a practical believer in our people and in our country. Everything I have, all I can command," he added gently, "is at your service."

After a moment's silence the other looked up from the paper-knife his fingers had been nervously balancing.

"I have had more blows in the face than the world will ever guess, Mr. President. But this time it is a stab to the very heart . . . . . Eleanor disappeared on Monday and I can get no trace of her."

"Your daughter!" the President ejaculated, leaning forward on the desk.

The other bowed. "She disappeared Monday, about noon. This is Saturday. She has vanished—blotted out as if she had never been."

The President turned slightly and glanced through the window. He could not bear to see those anxious eyes, and the suggestion of trembling about that masterful chin.

"What has been done? What can be done? What do you suspect?" he said.

"You don't mind my walking around a bit?" Cuyler inquired, half rising from his chair. "I had a tiresome journey down here—"

"By all means stroll around! A frequent habit of my own. Often, when feeling a little cramped, I pace up and down here—it's not a bad idea."

"To reply to your question, Mr. President, my daughter, accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Hazard, went to the studio of a painter named Winthrop, Monday morning, to give him a final sitting for her portrait. The studio is in Fifty-fifth street, near Seventh Avenue. Mrs. Hazard, you know, has chaperoned Eleanor since my wife died."

BIG LIST OF CASES IN TO-DAY'S POLICE COURT

Theft Charge Against Nicolo Basciano Was Enlarged Until To-morrow—His Worship Reserved Judgment in a Non-Support Case.

A young man named Charles Gould appeared in the police court this morning, charged with being drunk and disorderly in a public place. He pleaded guilty to the charge and was fined $2.00.

Another young man was fined $20 for unlawfully supplying liquor to a minor.

A well-known local jeweller was charged with practising and carrying on a pawnbroker's business without a license. He pleaded not guilty. A man who appeared in the Police Court some time ago, for being drunk gave evidence. He was fined $2.00 in the court at that time, and had to sell his watch to get the money. He went to the jeweller in quesion, and tried to get him to lend money on the watch, but according to the statement of the witness, he would not do this, stating that he had no pawnbroker's license, and that he could not do it under those circumstances. He, however, bought the watch outright, giving the witness $2.50 for it. The Chief had received information which led him to believe that the accused had lent money on the watch, but this could not be proven, so the Magistrate dismissed the case.

Nicolo Basciano, who appeared yesterday morning, charged with stealing some copper and brass castings from the C. G. E. works, appeared again this morning. An interpreter was present to give the evidence. Mr. Hall appeared for the prisoner. Mr. E. G. Patterson, of the C. G. E., was also present. He identified the stolen castings, and stated that they were valued at between $10 and $20. He stated that the workmen around the C.G.E. complained about losing tools and he wanted the prisoner to be charged with this also. His Worship would not try him unless an information was laid. So, in order to get some evidence, the case was laid over until to-morrow morning. Basciano pleaded guilty to stealing the castings.

Judgment was reserved in the case of Robert Glover, who was charged with vagrancy and non-support of his wife and family of three small children. Glover pleaded not guilty to the charge, and was very indignant at the idea of his being arrested on such a charge, despite the fact that the evidence showed that he has not been working for nearly two months, and that the Relief Officer has had to send provisions and fuel to his wife upon two different occasions during that time. High County Constable Cochrane and Mr. Miller, Relief Officer, both gave evidence in the case. Mr. Miller read two notes which he had received from Mrs. Glover, requesting him to send her provisions and fuel. Mr. Cochrane stated that he had visited the Glover home some time ago, just after Mrs. Glover had got back from the Hospital, and he stated that things were in a somewhat dilapidated state. He said that Glover had not been working, and that the family were in need. He visited the home again later, and stated that things were a little better. License Inspector Stewart gave evidence to the effect that Glover had been put on the prohibited list. Mrs. Glover, in her evidence, was very indignant about this, and stated that it was Mr. Miller's doings, and that her husband did not drink. She stated that he had always supported her until he took sick after Christmas, and then he had boils on his arm and was unable to work. She also stated that she could get along without the city's help, and could support her children.

Glover gave evidence to the effect that he had worked two months in the lumber camps before Christmas, during which time he had sent all his wages home. He could not say how much he sent home. He again worked for ten days after Christmas, and then took sick.

The Chief suggested to Mr. Miller that in future he (Mr. Miller) would be more careful and not offend prospering families in that manner.

THE APPEAL DISMISSED WITH COSTS

Judges Riddell and Sutherland Heard the Appeal in Innes vs. Village of Havelock Case Yesterday.

THE JUDGMENT

Today's Osgoode Hall report in the Toronto Globe contains the following case of local interest. Dennistoun, Peck and Kerr appeared for the plaintiff, and Hall, Hayes and Hall for the defendant.

Divisional Court.

Before Riddell, J., Sutherland, J.

Innis v. Village of Havelock.—An appeal by plaintiff from the judgment of the Chancellor of the 15th of November, 1910. By consent of counsel heard before the two Judges. This action was brought by Alexander Innis and Maud Innis to recover $5,000 damages for injuries to Maud Innis from slipping into a hole in the sidewalk of the village, causing her to fall and suffer the injuries complained of, which it is alleged, was caused by defendants' negligence in not repairing the walks where the accident occurred. At the trial the action was dismissed without costs. Appeal dismissed with costs.

TUBERCULOSIS MEETING ON MONDAY NEXT

All Citizens Interested Are Urged to Attend Gathering in Council Chamber to Discuss the Subject

IMPORTANT MEETING

His Worship Mayor Morrow will preside at the meeting to be held on Monday night, next, for the purpose of discussing the tuberculosis situation in Peterborough and of arranging an organization to take up the work of fighting against the great white plague. The meeting will be held in the City Council chamber, and all citizens interested in the movement are cordially invited to be present and take part in the discussion. That there is a field for such a movement is undeniable and an organization such as proposed, could do a vast amount of useful work. A district nurse could be secured whose work it would be to visit the patients and to look after the sanitation, ventilation and similar matters. A sanitarium, such as have been established elsewhere, could be built and other means of stopping the spread of the disease in the city, adopted.

Mary Daly, Jealousy Over Whom is Said to Have Caused Suicide of Kingston Man Comes From Here

WORKED AT HOTEL

The Examiner yesterday contained a despatch from Kingston, which contained the information that Gordon Comper, a chef at the Crimason Hotel in Kingston, had committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid, the reason for his rash act being given as jealousy. Comper was eighteen years of age, and was married in December last. Since yesterday the Examiner has learned that his wife, Mary Daly, comes from Peterborough, and was for some time employed as a waitress at the National Hotel in this city. She was older than her youthful husband and was a waitress at the National Hotel in this city, when he first met her.

KILLED IN WRECK

NEW CASTLE, N.B., MARCH 9.—Harvey McDougall, aged 35, was killed, and a number of passengers injured in the wreck at Derby Junction.

MOBILIZATION OF TROOPS CAUSES TALK IN ENGLAND

Has the United States Had Suggestion of Great Britain in Bringing Troops Together to Protect British and Other Foreign Interests There.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

LONDON, ENG., MARCH 9.—The mobilization of United States troops on the borders of Mexico is the talk of all political circles and in view of the reported death of Diaz it is taken for granted here that Uncle Sam has designs on partitioning Mexico. Enquiries at the foreign office to-day elicited the information that the British Government knew no reason for interference. It is pointed out that Diaz is 80 years old, that he was a veritable dictator and it is admitted that nobody could fill his place, and least of all, the revolutionist Madero, who has been fighting for power for years. A cablegram dated yesterday, was received this morning denying the reports of Diaz's death, but summoning all Mexicans abroad to return to the defence of their country. In view of the extensive British and Canadian interests in Mexico, great interest is being taken in the movements of the United States army on the border.

London, Eng.—(Later)—There is a very pronounced feeling here this afternoon that the United States has the concurrent and possibly first suggestion of Great Britain in massing troops on the Mexican frontier, recognizing the U. S. practical suzerainty over Mexico. It is thought that Britain has pointed out Uncle Sam's duty to protect the British and other foreign interests in the neighbouring republic. Those who know the spirit of Mexicans best, say there will be serious resistance should the United States Army attempt an advance across the border on any kind of protective or punitive mission. Federals and Insurrectors would join to resist the invaders.

VESTA VICTORIA MADE A BIG HIT IN OTTAWA

Miss Vesta Victoria, heralded as England's most celebrated comedienne, and her company of international stars, opened a two nights' engagement at the Russell theatre last evening and was given a most cordial reception. Vesta was the headline feature of a splendid bill of classy vaudeville and when she came out for her first number she was given a great ovation. In the balcony was a large number of Britishers and they cheered, applauded and shouted in the good, old-fashioned ways of 'onc. Vesta Victoria was quite generous with her numbers, which included "The Widow," "The Artist's Model," "Now I Have to Call Him Father," "Skating," "I've Got Mother's Husband," "Don't Sing the Chorus,' and "Poor John," The last number was in response to numerous requests, and was one of her best numbers. She appears in a variety of costumes, her songs are all capital ones, she has a most attractive personality, and each number was warmly applauded. The enthusiasm of the reception accorded her was enhanced by the shouts of the Britishers in the balcony and by many of the audience joining in the catchy choruses.

Opening the bill is Iashinowsky, a brilliant young Russian pianist, whose playing was remarkably fine. The audience insisted on encores till he had given five numbers, all of them delightful.

The Church City Four, in a singing and dancing diversion, are exceptionally good. They have very pleasing numbers and all have voices of admirable quality that blend beautifully in the concerted numbers.

Van Camp and Frank Bush in individual acts made big hits. They are story tellers and comedians and both in their line of stuff and their way of geting it over the footlights scored big all the time they were on the stage.

Johnny Ford sings in a very acceptable style, but his eccentric dancing was the big feature of his turn. In this he was immense and the audience could not get too much of him. The bill closes with a splendid musical act by the Five Maclarens, four ladies and a man. They all appear in kilts and their acts includes singing, instrumental music and dancing. They play a variety of instruments in a finished manner and their act is dainty and attractive throughout.

Vesta Victoria and her supporting artists will be the attraction at the Russell this afternoon for a special matinee and to-night for the closing engagement of the visit.—Ottawa Citizen.

THE KING'S BUSINESS AT KNOX CHURCH

People are learning new hymns in Knox church these days and some are discovering their voices. The general effect is inspiring. Song service is proving to be a very attractive feature in the mission, as evidenced by the presence of many in the church at an early hour to join in the singing. The solos given by Mr McBretney were very much appreciated. The constant use of his voice in leading does not appear to mar its clear tone. Another large congregation on Wednesday night shows that the interest is growing. A large number remained after the meeting was dismissed for a special prayer ser vice. Rev. Mr. Woodside gave a very convincing address on Power(basing his address on the words of Christ, "I'm them." Every life is controlled by power of some kind. Power has its attraction from the personality behind it. The greatest power in the world is not that of wealth or pleasure or fame, but the power of the personality of Jesus. It is transforming, and the strongest life is one in which the personality of Christ is most completely manifest Christ wants this power shown in his followers and it is theirs to have. Each address seems more powerful than the last and many are missing a great privilege.

THE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION CONVENTION HELD ITS FIRST SESSION IN PUBLIC LIBRARY THIS MORNING

Address by Mr. J. H. Burnham on "The Library and the People" Was Given This Morning.

DELEGATES PRESENT

The first session of the second annual meeting of the Lindsay District Library Association, which was held in the lecture room of the public library this morning was opened by the Vice-President of the Library Board, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.A. In the absence of the president, Dr. A. E. Vrooman, Mr. Burnham occupied the position of chairman. On a vote it was decided to dispense with the reading of the minutes of the last meeting. A letter was next read, from Mayor Morrow, who is out of the city, expressing regret at his inability to be present. Mr. E. H. D. Hall, chairman of the Board, extended a hearty welcome to the visiting delegates on behalf of the Association at this their annual meeting.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of Judge Harding, the responsibility of presenting the annual address fell to the lot of Mr. J. H. Burnham, who concluded his address on the Library and the people as follows:

When we come here, let us remember that we are entering the Temple of Knowledge, that the place whereon we have set our foot is holy ground. Then and then only shall we appreciate our privilege. But while I speak of privileges let us realize that the greatest of them is the privilege of calling others to the feast. There is yet to be devised, here in Canada at least, some workable scheme for taking the sources and the means of knowledge to those who, for various reasons, cannot go to them. Herein lies the deepest meaning and truest value of a library and I hope that some day we shall see trusted employees of the city going about from door to door exchanging books and perhaps exchanging views upon new ideas or old ones revamped. Then and then only will the function of this centre of thought be fulfilled and the dark places made light and I may add—justice done to all the taxpayers.

The advantage of a reading and thinking public to a community is of course very great. The history of men and women of talent as of great and original geniuses shows that as a rule they began in a small way. Finding access to sources of information, instruction and experiment, they quickly improved. Without these sources they themselves have borne testimony to the fact that it would have been largely impossible for them to develop and if it is so of men and women of genius, necessarily it must be much more generally true of those who are not geniuses. It is clear therefore, that the responsibility resting upon a municipality with respect to a library, museum and place of reference, with reference to the people comprised in that municipality cannot be overestimated. It is also clear that for people to sit calmly and reservedly still, expecting that the love of knowledge will arise of its own accord and that there will be as it were a general rush for good books, is to expect too much. Hence we may con-

NINETY BELOW ZERO AT HEIGHT OF SIX MILES

(Toronto World).

Ninety below zero at a height of 6½ miles above the earth somewhere between Toronto and the vicinity of Peterborough.

This is the interesting knowled ge gained as a result of the sending out of the first series of balloons from the meteorological observatory.

The balloon was of rubber, 39 inches in diameter, and charged with hydrogen gas, so that on reaching an altitude of some miles, it would necessarily burst, thus releasing a miniature parachute containing an ingenious recording in strument. This not only shows the height attained, but also the tem perature.

In this case, the balloon rose 7½ miles, and at 6½ miles, the 90 below mark was reached. The ba lloon then entered the "isothermal layer" and the temperature rose.

Apparently, the prospects of the parachute turning up again was highly remote, but it landed safe ly in a garden about 15 miles southeast of Peterborough, and Direct or Stupart of the observatory was elated last night.

The whole outfit cost $8, incl uding $3 for the balloon and $5 for the recorder.

The Dominion Government is following Germany's lead in investigating the upper wastes of ether. In Germany, it is claimed that three out of four attempts to re cover the instruments succeeded.

IT GROWS HAIR

Here Are Facts We Want You to Prove at Our Risk

Marvelous as it may seem, Rexall "93" Hair Tonic has grown hair on heads that were once bald. Of course, in none of these cases were the hair roots dead, nor had the scalp taken on a glazed, shiny appearance.

We want you to get a bottle of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic and use it as directed. If it does not relieve scalp irritation, remove dandruff, prevent the hair from falling out and promote an increased growth of hair, and in every way give entire satisfaction, simply come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand back to you every penny paid us for it. THE SUN LIFE'S SATISFACTORY SHOWING

An Exceptionally Good Report For 1910

The history of the Sun Life Assurance Company leads one to expect a good annual report. The statement just to hand is more than ordinarily satisfactory to the public.

The new assurances paid for in 1910 were over two million dollars in excess of the previous year, an increase of nearly ten per cent. The cash income showed a much larger proportionate increase—$9,575,463.94 exclusive of additional capital and premium thereon as against $7,778,132.05 for 1909, an increase of over twenty per cent.

Payments to policy-holders, death claims, matured endowments, profits, etc., amounted to over $3,000,000 bringing the total payment to policy-holders since the organization of the Company to the huge sum of $26,266,630.01.

During the year after a surplus distribution amongst policy-holders of $377,792.34, and applying a further sum of $210,850.28 to place Annuity Reserves on basis of British offices select Annuity Tables, a sum of $643,909.01 was added to the surplus, making it, according to Dominion Government Standard, $5,219,921.18.

With increases in every department and an all-round strengthening of the Company's position, it is evident that the Sun Life of Canada offers every guarantee of safety and profitable return to the present and prospective insurer.

GRASPING AT THE SHADOW.

Many a man has frequently been persuaded or tempted to withdraw from a saving bank the hard earned savings which he has, perhaps, for years been laying aside to keep him in his old age; sometimes by a friend who applies to him for a temporary loan—"just for a few weeks," the inducement to part with his money being the over of a handsome bonus, but more frequently is he the victim of the silver-tongued exponent of some get-rich-quick scheme. Experience teaches us, however, that too often does the borrower fails in his probably good intentions, and the lender loses the amount lent as well as the interest which his money would have earned had he left it in the savings bank, and that in ninety-nine times out of a hundred does the get-rich-quick scheme fails to materialize — in grasping at the shadow we have lost the substance. The Canadian Government Annuities Act protects a man against improvident acts and injudicious investments—it safeguards him against himself. Moneys paid into the annuities fund cannot be alienated or used for any other purpose, but must retain intact for the object for which the payments have been made, otherwise the end aimed at would never, as has been illustrated above, be attained, and old age would overtake us unprovided for its many trials and tribulations.

Further information on the subject may be obtained by applying to the Postmaster, or direct to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa, to whom all letters go free of postage.

A GOOD TEST.

On the first page of the Mail and Empire of yesterday one finds the wail of Sir William Van Horne, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, over the disaster and destruction that will follow the adoption of the proposed trade agreement with the United States. He declares that not a single industry in Canada will be benefitted by it, and that in adopting it "Canada is making a bed to lie in, and die in." Sir William does not get down to details. In his forecast of evils he does not show how his greatest line on earth will be junked by reciprocity. He cannot: for nothing but prosperity, continuous and increased, for the Canadian Pacific Railway is indicated. On the same page of the Mail and Empire there is a statement that a ten per cent. increase in wages has been granted to C. P. R. trainmen west of Port Arthur—pretty good for a railway that is to be reduced by reciprocity to two streaks of rust. The stock market doesn't seem to view things through Sir William's blue glasses. The stock market is the most sensitive and prophetic indication of conditions, adverse or favourable, that arise from great changes in fiscal, commercial, or national affairs. If the financal world shared Sir William Van Horne's prejudiced pessimism the stock of the C. P. R. would tumble at a tremendous rate. But it stands firm and has been advancing ever since the agreement was announced in the House. On Jan. 19th, one week before Mr. Fielding made his announcement C. P. R. stock stood at 269¼. Since January 26th, when Mr. Fielding made the details of the reciprocity agreement known, C. P. R. stock has steadily advanced, and the same issue of the Mail and Empire that contained the wail of the President of the C. P. R. states that C. P. R. stock closed at 214¾; that is, C. P. R stock has pushed itself upwards five points through the wet blanket of reciprocity. In the same time the stock of the Canadian Bank of Commerce has advanced from 215 to 220—another five point gain—in spite of the fact that its President has used the reciprocity agreement to raze all the industries of Canada to the ground, and sow the sites with salt. No doubt the marines listen with bated breath to the stories of our high-priced pessimists, which are discredited by the best test applicable to the situation.

PARTYISM DEAD?

The Montreal Star emits the following twaddle:

Reciprocity has, indeed, shown us anew from ocean to ocean now thoroughly dead Party is. It is first vital issue which has appeared in our politics for a long time and men of all classes—whether public leaders or private citizens, whether financiers or farmers, whether manufacturers or mechanics—are looking at it with free eyes, entirely forgetting whether yesterday they thought themselves Liberal or Conservative. The party "tie" is so slight a thing that most people forget its existence; and "change their coats"—to use a phrase which was once a reproach but is now an evidence of unfearing and independent thinking — quite as calmly in the political as in the sartorial sense.

There may be some truth in what the Star says if applied to the rank and file of the party for which the Star speaks, but the elect—or rather, elected members of the Conservative party are bound hand and foot, heart and conscience in the bonds of party. Conservative papers tell us that the Conservative members of Parliament are a unit against reciprocity and will stay a unit, no matter what logic or argument may appeal to them in favour of the trade agreement. The Conservative legislation of Manitoba is said to be a unit against the agreement and we are promised that the Ontario Legislature under the bluff of the bluff. Sir James Whitney will also be a unit in denunciation of the agreement. Even before the question is for a moment argued the decison is, in accordance with the wave of the party whip, dead against the experiment. What nonsense then for the Star to say that party is dead. The Liberal party as an organized party is the only party to show a spirit of independence, an independence of judgment and decision. It is made a reproach to the Liberal party that a considerable number of the prominent members are against the agreement. That does not prove that the agreement is hostile to the interests of Canada. But it shows that in the consideration of a subject even so far reaching as reciprocity by men of open mind, there is bound to be divergent conclusions, arising from differing points of view.

THE FAILURE OF THE SENATE TO "GOBBLE US."

(Kingston Standard (Conservative.)

The United States Senate has not only adjourned but it has adjourned without passing the reciprocity measure. It has in other words, actually refused to put into effect a measure which the Imperialists howlers of Canada tell us would surely result in annexation to the States. No greater sacrifice has ever been made by any legislative body in the world, thus refusal to annex a land of eight million souls, inestimably rich in its resources and richer still in its possibilities and is future. What the Senate could have been thinking of is beyond us, for according to authorities like Sir William Vanhorne and Sir Edmund Walker, and that they are authorities even these gentlemen themselves with all their modesty must admit—according to them the Senate had but to pass the measure and presto, Canada was annexed. Foolish Senators, foolish Americans, thus by their legislative failure to lose a kingdom! Their short-sightedness is the blunder of the age—a Waterloo which they have administrated unto themselves and for which we as Canadians safe from the noose, to the moment at least must thank them upon our bended knees. Nevertheless their magnanimity is to say the least astonishing, for ordinarly the American people are not so slow to take advantage of a good bargain. Can it be—and we ask the question more in a spirit of idle curiosity—can it be that these politicians at Washington are more astute than we suppose and have refused to put this tariff bill through because of the numerous protests against it, not on the part of the Canadian people but on the part of the American people, who feel they have the wrost of the deal? We ask the question, as we say, only in idle curiosity, and yet the answer might not be without significance. It is barely possible, just barely possible, that it has not been for nothing that the Americans have refused to "Eat us alive."

SIR WILFRID ON THE AGREEMENT.

(London Advertiser)

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was not too severe in his denunciation of the anti-reciprocity agitation. He characterized as an insult to the intelligence and character of the Canadian people the contention that more liberal trade relations with the United States would lead to a dissolution of Canadian autonomy. Canadian autonomy and national pride and self-respect are plants of sturdier growth than some Canadians would have the world believe. It is a traitorous blow to this great and growing young country to proclaim to the people of Great Britain and the United States that Canadians are shivering over their national destiny. Is the Dominion such a weakling that it cannot trust itself to make a business deal with a neighbour? Is its patriotism such poor stuff that it can be traded over the counter with the butter, cheese, eggs and wheat that will be sold to the United States?

The agreement in its commercial aspect—which is its only real aspect—is not open to effective attack. Those who attempt to attack it as a business proposition run full tilt at one another. One appeals to the city dweller to oppose legislation, which will increase the cost of food. Another implores the farmer to save himself from a deluge of cheap farm products from the United States. A third wails over the impending downfall of Canadian industry. A fourth—the western machine politican, typified by Premier Roblin—scores the Government for not making a deeper cut in the duties on agricultural implements.

Sir Wilfrid points out that the implement industry is the only one affected. The duty has been reduced from 17½ to 15 per cent. on some lines, and from 20 to 15 per cent. on others. As there has been a powerful demand for duty-free implements—in which the whole prairie wing of the Conservative party joined—and for a general reduction of the tariff on manufactured goods, the Government has been exceedingly careful of the industrial interests. Any protest from that quarter is unjustifiable, and short-sighted. If the Canadian Government had refused to allow the Canadian farmers and fishermen the proffered boon of a better market, it would have set forces in motion which would have threatened the tariff barrier which stands between the Canadian manufacturers and the full sweep of American competition. There is no reason to believe that the Canadian captains of industry as an organization are promoting and financing the present agitation. It is the work of a few special interests, seconded by the active politicians and a section of the Conservative press—with some honourable exceptions. The clamour has not a particle of sincerity behind it. It has nearly spent its strength, if not its malice. It will not prevent the adoption of the agreement by the Canadian Parliament, and it will subside before the next election.

SOME OF MR. SIFTON'S ERRORS IN RESPECT TO RECIPROCITY

(Farmers' Sun)

Hon. Mr. Sifton, ex-Minister of the Interior, in a speech in the House of Commons last week, put himself on record as against reciprocity. A considerable part of the ex-Minister's speech was devoted to a consideration of the effect of the agreement on the agricultural interest. His argument against reciprocity in agricultural products is based on a double-barrelled statement. He asserts, in the first place, that farmers are prosperous now, by implication at least he says they are sufficiently prosperous, and in the second place he contends that reciprocity will not add to this prosperity. In support of the contention that farmers are prosperous enough at present, Mr. Sifton uses the same set of figures which T. A. Russell used, with better effect, when the latter addressed the Canadian Club of Toronto. According to these statistics grain and fodder bring nearly 50 per cent. more than they did ten years ago, meats 48½ per cent. more and dairy products 33 per cent.

Assuming that the figures quoted are correct they do not prove the case. It is no advantage to the Ontario farmer, it is rather a disadvantage to him, when grain and fodder are high in price. These things are to the average farmer of this province, simply raw matreials—meats, cheese and poultry being the finished product. An increase of nearly 50 per cent. in the cost of the raw material, while the finished product in the form of cheese, has advanced by only 33 per cent., spells not prosperity but adversity. Indeed the falling off in hog production, which continued up to last year, and the stagnation in dairying, were the direct result of the increase in the cost of the feed used in the making of bacon and cheese and the scarcity and high cost of labour.

The Sun ventures, too, to challenge the accuracy of the figures used by Mr. Sifton in his attempt to establish his case. He says dairy products have risen in price by 33 per cent. in ten years. A reference to The Sun's market tables towards the end of the last factory season will show that cheese—the most important of dairy products—was then only about 11 per cent. higher than it was ten years before. Creamery quotations to-day show a greater advance, but even these have not increased by more than one half the amount claimed by Mr. Sifton. It is true butcher cattle are considerably higher but export cattle, on the preparation of which a greater outlay is incurred, are, so far from being 48½ per cent. dearer than a decade ago, only 28 per cent. higher, while eggs show an increase of some 10 per cent. If Mr. Sifton will consult any practical farmer he will learn that such advances in the price of finished products, as have occurred are more than offset by the increased cost of raw material, labour and other factors entering into production.

We venture, also, to challenge the accuracy of the figures quoted by Mr. Sifton as to the cost of articles farmers have to buy. Mr. Sifton says that woollen goods have advanced by only 23.3 per cent. and cotton goods by 25 per cent in ten years. The ex-Minister may be quoting manufacturers' prices and may in that case be correct. The cost of distribution, which has enormously increased, may not be reckoned on. Certain it is any housewife knows that $1.25 will not go as far in buying clothing to-day as $1 did a decade since. The advance is nearer 50 per cent.

But it is when Mr. Sifton attempts to belittle the importance of the American market to the Canadian farmer that he goes wholly wrong. He says the average price of hogs in Ontario and Quebec is higher than in the United States. Any farmer who reads market reports knows that this statement is wholly erroneous. Last week hogs at Buffalo were 10c higher than they were in Montreal and, for the greater part of Ontario, Buffalo is a very much more convenient market place than Montreal, and one that can be reached at very much less cost in freight. The Buffalo price was 50c higher than the Toronto price, and hogs from all Western Ontario can reach Buffalo at as low a cost, as is incurred in reaching Toronto; in many cases the rates to Buffalo are lower than tey are to Toronto. Just now, too, Buffalo and Toronto prices for hogs are more nearly on a level than they were during the greater part of last year. At times in 1910 the Buffalo price was about a dollar above Toronto quotations. At all times a much better price can be obtained in the American city than is obtainable in Toronto for hogs that have passed their value for breeding purposes. In dealing with cattle Mr. Sifton contents himself with saying "prices are variable." It is perhaps as well the ex-Minister did not go into details because at the very time he was speaking best cattle were selling in Buffalo at 60c and in Chicago at 90c above the Toronto level.

* * *

Mr. Sifton continues in the line of error when he says "the whole tendency of this arrangement (that made between the two Governments for reciprocity in agricultural products) is to induce the farmer to adapt his raw product to the United States market." The Ontario farmer will probably, under free trade, sell considerable barley in the United States; and he will be wise in doing it because he can, with the money obtained for the barley, obtain more valuable feeding grains at less cost.

* * *

Barley is higher in Toronto even now, merely in anticipation of the opening of the American market, by nearly a cent and a half a pound, while American corn and oats are less than a cent a pound in Buffalo; and oats are better for growing stock and corn for finishing on than is barley. In this respect, and in other directions as well, the arrangement will be a stimulus to good farming. The experience of last summer, when those Ontario farmers who sold cream in the United States even in face of a five cents per gallon duty realized over 20c per cwt. more on their milk than did other farmers who made cheese for the British market, furnishes the clearest possible evidence of the extent to which dairying will be stimulated by free trade in this line; and increased dairying spells soil improvement. Under free trade Ontario horse breeders will find a better market at their Southern door than they now find in the distant West; and horses cannot be considered a raw product. With the American market open sugar beets, potatoes and turnips—grown for that market — will rank high among the money crops of the province; and the wider the area in hoe crops the more successful will be the fight against weeds. Manager Johnson, of the Norfolk Fruit-Gowers' Association, is authority for the statement that even last year, when prices were higher than usual in Ontario, owing to a short crop, he could have obtained fifty cents a barrel more for the 36,000 barrels of apples handled by his Association than he did obtain by selling in other markets. In normal years the advantage would be greater; and nothing would give a greater stimulus to really good farming than an uplift for the apple industry. In all lines of finished products—in beef, cattle, horses, hogs, dairy products, and poultry—prices are, taking the year through, higher in the United States than they are here, while some at least of the raw materials required in preparing these finished products are lower on the American than they are on the Canadian side. Thus free trade in all agricultural lines will mean a double advantage to the Canadian farmer; and in this case, unlike the Siftonian assertions, there is no hollowness in the statement made.

THE ALL STARS WON A SEE-SAW BATTLE BY 13 GOALS TO 11

Score Was Tied Eight Times and the Fans Got Their Money's Worth in Excitement--There Was Never More Than a Two Goal Margin Between the Teams.

Last night's exhibition contest at Brock street rink, Harvey Sproule's senior O. H. A. selects and the Peterborough intermediates will be remembered as one of the most exciting and interesting games seen here in a long time. The All Stars won by 13 goals to 11 and were in front at half time 5 to 4. It was a see-saw exhibition and was anybody's game until Murphy scored the final goal less than a minute before time was up. The score was tied no less than eight times during the struggle, at 1-1, 3-3, 4-4, 5-5, 7-7, 8-8, 9-9 and 10-10. The teams took turns in leading, the Petes being in front by two goals at one stage in the first half and having a one goal lead at two different times in the second period. At no time had one team more than two goals of a lead. It was a carnival of scoring and the rapid counting and frequent changes in the positions of the teams kept the spectators on their toes all through and the fans enjoyed the exhibition immensely.

The big score is accounted for by the fact that the teams were shorthanded all through. They started out six men aside. Kennedy of the All Stars having missed the train, and the locals had to drop Sorel. Park was injured in the first half and had to retire, taking Kerr with him to even up, and the teams finished the half with five men each. Park tried to finish the game by coming back after the rest, but was hurt again and had to leave for good. Later on Ray was injured and had to go off for repairs and the game went on four men aside. It was during this period that the All Stars took the lead for the last time.

The small number of men on the ice helped the visitors, as Murphy and Burkhart were thus given lots of ice room and they took full advantage of the opportunity. The big Argonaut defence player who did not seem able to get going when the teams were six aside, kept tearing down all through the second half and his rushes, with the assistance of McLean's shooting, won the game for the visitors. It is felt by the Petes that with the teams playing their full complement the victory might have been theirs. At that it was a nip-and-tuck battle, with the result always in doubt.

The most exciting period was in the middle of the second half, Park and Kerr were off owing to the former being hurt and then Ray had to retire for the same reason, taking Burkhart with him and there were only eight men on the ice. The Stars had Holmes in goal, Murphy on the defence and Vivor of the Peterborough forward line, while Kelly was the sole survivor of the Peterborough forward line. He played centre and Hefferman moved up to rover, while Bond and Derocher constituted the defence. A moment later it looked as if the team would dwindle down to three men as Hefferman broke his skate. He however, stayed in the game and the eight players had a great battle. The visitors had the better of the argument, however, mainly due to Murphy's rushes and scored two goals, taking the lead again before Ray came back. It was a spectacular game, full of brilliant rushing and stick handling and the see-saw nature of the scoring entertained the fans to the limit. The Petes fully held their own with the senior Stars and the crowd was more than satisfied with the exhibition put up by the team. The visitors had it all over the Petes in weight but had nothing in speed, stick-handling or combination over the home stars.

Holmes, the Parkdale goalkeeper, lived up to all the good things that have been said about him and sustained his reputation as the best goalkeeper in the senior O H A by his clever work last night. He was as cool as the ice beneath his feet, and half a dozen times saved certain goals by coming out and picking the shot off the stick of the man with the rubber, while his handling of shots from outside was superb.

Murphy, the Argonaut captain was a star both on the defence and on the attack. He was a very hard man to get around and was equally hard to stop when he got going, although the Petes boxed him up pretty well in the early stages and it was not until the second half that he succeeded in getting through for a score. It was a pit for him when the teams got down to four men a-side. Burkhart, the big T.A.A.C. man, worked hard all through, and although not as effective or as brilliant as Murphy, was decidedly useful. On the forward lines Bud McLean, of the Toronto Rowing Club was easily the star. Through his tactics of playing inside home, as he called it after the game, he was always on the job for a shot and no better man around centre ice has been seen for a long time. He followed in on the nets like a flash and scored three on rebounds, while in all he scored seven goals. McCreath, of the T.A.A.C., was fast and effective all through, and Kerr of the Broadviews, did good work while he was on.

The Petes played more effective combination than the visitors and got the majority of their goals on assisting rushes, taking the rubber well in for shots. Naturally, when the team-owned down combination was out of the question with the Peterborough line shot to pieces and the individual work of the visitors was effective. Derocher has played better games in the nets than he did last night, but at that he made a lot of pretty saves, including a beauty from Murphy's stick when the big fellow got clean through. Bond checked with his usual success and his rushing was the best he has done this season, although he had hard luck when he got in close. Hefferman's work was in good and in the second half he tore off some beautiful rushes, two of which resulted in goals.

Fred Kelly was a hero on the forward line, working in the entire sixty minutes without letup. He was always on the rushes down the wing keeping the defence on the jump throughout, while his checking back was a feature. Park was the centre of the combination while he was on the ice, and was just as he was put out of the game with four men aside. He was one of the most [illegible] and took a lot of punishment from the opponents. He was the [illegible] the combination, as a glance over the details of the play will show.

Ernie Wasson handled the game satisfactorily. It was a clean exhibition with the teams showing the best of feeling. The line-up:

All Stars		Peterborough
	Goal
Holmes (Parkdale)		Derocher
	Point
Murphy (Argos)		Bond
	Cover
Burkhart (T.A.A.C.)		Hefferman
	Centre
McLean (Rowing Club)		Park
	Right Wing
McCreath (T.A.A.C.)		Ray
	Left Wing
Kerr (Broadviews)		Kelly

The game opened at a fast clip, both teams showing a lot of speed. Peterborough broke away for a rush, but Burkhart stopped and then Kerr got away nicely down the wing, but there was nothing doing. Hefferman relieving. The Stars were the first to score. Murphy rushed nicely and shot the puck rebounding off Derocher's pads to McLean, who batted it into the nets like a flash. All Stars 1, Peterborough 0.

Peterborough quickly evened up. Bond started a neat rush and passed to Ray, who returned as Murphy was reached and Bond scooped one past Holmes while on his knees. All Stars 1, Peterborough 1.

Hefternan and McLean mixed it and both were penalized. Ray and Kelly went down the ice together and fooled Murphy and Burkhart with a double pass. Ray scoring neatly from a few feet out. All Stars 1, Peterborough 2.

McLean was sent away again for tripping Hefternan, and while he was off Peterborough increased their lead on a three man rush started by Hefternan, who passed to Ray and the latter transferred to Park, who banged it through. All Stars 1, Peterboorugh 3.

Peterborough were having the better of the going at this stage and it began to look as if they were going to run up a score. The Stars soon rallied, however, and McLean closed the gap by taking a pass from Kerr and fooling Derocher. All Stars 2, Peterborough 3.

Bond was chased to the side lines for tripping The visitors were the aggressors and McLean tied up the score by beating Derocher on a shot from the side. All Stars 3, Peterborough 3.

A few moments later McCreath scored from a mix-up and the visitors were ahead. All Stars 4, Peterborough 3.

To even things up, Ray and Park unworked a pretty piece of combination which ended in Ray fooling Holmes. All Stars 4, Peterborough 4.

The visitors were not to be denied, however. The puck came back to Kerr from a faceoff in front of the Peterborough nets and he took advantage of the opening. All Stars 5, Peterborough 4.

Park had his knee badly hurt and had to retire, Kerr being dropped with him. Murphy was penalized at the same time for hooking same one, and it was five men to four, with Peterborough having the one man advantage, but they could not score. Ray was hurt and took the count for a few minutes, but went on playing. There was no further scoring before half time.

The teams had six men aside when they started the second half, Park coming back into the game.

Peterborough opened the half auspiciously by scoring the first goal. Kelly tore off a beautiful rush and shot clear on. Holmes made a clever stop but Ray followed in like lightning and batted in the rebound. All Stars 5, Peterborough 5.

The All Stars were not long in checking to the front again. McLean scored on a rebound after a nice step by Derocher. All Stars 6, Peterborough 5.

The visitors added to their lead a few moments later, Murphy putting off a nice rush and centring to McLean who found an opening behind Derocher. All Stars 7, Peterborough 5.

Park was hurt again and retired with Kerr, this time for good.

Burkhart was chased to the bench for mixing it. Kelly and Ray went up together with a pretty piece of combination and Kelly beat Holmes from close in. All Stars 7, Peterborough 6.

McLean took the count when bodied by Hefferman and there was a delay. When play was resumed Hefferman tore off a nice rush and passed to Ray, who returned, and the cover-point shot one past Holmes. All Stars 7, Peterborough 7.

Hefferman was benched for tripping Murphy, but neither team scored while he was off. He signalized his return by going up with Ray in a neat passing rush and scoring. All Stars 7, Peterborough 8.

Murphy tore off one of his famous rushes at this stage, winding it up by neatly flipping the rubber into the corner of the nets. All Stars 8, Peterborough 8.

McLean broke the tie a few seconds later by following in behind Burkhart on the latter's rush and shooting after the big coverpoint had been bowled over. All Stars 9, Peterborough 8.

Peterborough tied the score again in short order, Ray scoring from a scrimmage. All Stars 9, Peterborough 9.

Peterborough took the lead from the face-off. Kelly rushing nicely and beating Holmes with a magnificent shot from outside the defence. All Stars 9, Peterborough 10.

Ray was hurt by a body check and had to retire, the Stars dropping Burkhart and the game went on with four men aside. The conditions favoured the visitors as it gave Murphy a chance and they soon tied the score and then went ahead, McLean scoring the rioing goal and McCreath the counter that put the visitors ahead.

Ray came back at this stage and the Petes worked their heads off trying to tie up the score. Bond rushed repeatedly, while Kelly and Ray were always going. They had a dozen good openings, but either shot wild or Holmes robbed them by pulling off spectacular stops. Finally Murphy got away again and fooled the Petes' defence for another goal. All Stars 12, Peterborough 10.

Ray banged another through for Peterborough in the next minute and with only a couple of minutes left the teams were on their toes all the way. Peterborough had the better of the going but could not score. Eventually after a half dozen dangerous Peterborough rushes had been headed off, Murphy tore down by himself and fooled everybody, including Derocher, for a counter that put the game on ice as there was only a minute left. Final score, All Stars 13, Peterborough 11. The summary follows:

1 All Stars, McLean.
2 Peterborough, Bond.
3 Peterborough, Ray.

NONE BETTER THAN GRILLERS

Manager Sutherland, of Frontenacs, Pays a Tribute to the Local Juniors

When the news of Kingston's victory over Orillia reached Peterborough, Manager McGeachie of the Grillers, sent the following telegram.

James T. Sutherland, Kingston, Ont.

Congratulations, Jim, old boy; I still think the Grillers could have defeated any junior O. H. A. team, barring Frontenacs.—Thos. McGeachie.

He has received the following letter in reply:

Kingston, Ont., March 7.,

Dear Mr. McGeachie,—Kindly accept sincere thanks for your kind message of congratulations. We met no better team than the Grillers proved themselves to be, this season.

Sincerely,

JAS. T. SUTHERLAND.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

How could the Petes hope to win last night's game? The locals scored goals No. 13 and 23.

Last night's game winds up the local hockey season and the boys will hang up their sticks and skates and place their uniforms among the moth balls until next season. The proposed game between the intermediates and a local picked team will not be played. Ray and Park were both hurt last night and the rest of the team have had enough hockey for this season.

THE FRUIT MARKET

From Farm and Dairy.

Robt. Thompson, Lincoln Co., Ont.

A few of our growers have shipped fruit to Winnipeg and west for 20 years. It may interest Farm and Dairy readers to learn a little of our experience and to receive an opinion as to the future of this market.

When we shipped our first cars years ago, we only sent from one to possibly seven or eight in a season, and that with varying success; some seasons we did well and occasionally we lost a car completely. About eight years ago we had become almost discouraged. A number of our members decided the next season to make another effort and work more in the line of special packing. They shipped a few cars the first season. The principal fruits were tomatoes, pears, apples and grapes, with a few peaches. Each season we have been more successful and have increased our shipments from year to year until this past year we sent from the Cold Storage and Forwarding Co., 163 car loads by freight alone to points as far west as Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge, with good success, very few complaints being received as to cars arriving in anything but the best condition. The assortment in the cars has multiplied until now we commence with asparagus, strawberries, currants, gooseberries, and cherries for the first cars followed by the old standards as well as peaches, plums, and many vegetables.

ADVANTAGEOUS FREIGHT RATES NEEDED

We feel from our experience of the past four years that if the special freight rates could be extended to points west and north of Brandon, that our output could be more than doubled with advantage to the consumers in the west and to our growers. With the experience gained we are sending almost everything by freight reaching Winnipeg on the fifth day in good condition

We pre-cool all cars containing the soft fruits. The great drawback to success is that inexperienced shippers without pre-cooling and icing facilities start in to ship with no experience in loading cars and their cars arrive in bad order in most cases and are a drug on the market. They also break the market for the good fruit. The western market has relieved our home markets and kept them more stable than in former years. Those who would ship to the west successfully must secure shipping facilities and be careful as to the packing of the fruit in proper packages.

There is just one cloud on the western horizon. If free trade were given to the Americans in fruits they would rush in their surplus at times that would demoralize the market and our Canadian growers would at such times not obtain more than freight charges, and as a consequence have to discontinue shipping. The trade would again drift as of old into the hands of the American combine dealers and they would demand a 30 per cent. and even 60 per cent. profit.

At present the bulk of our fruit is shipped direct to the retailer. There is a growing demand for box packed fruits and fancy packages, these in many cases bringing double the price of inferior packing. There is room in the west for all of our output for some years to come.

THREE PROBLEMS

From Farm and Dairy.

Morley Pettit, Provincial Apiarist

There are three great problems in bee-management in this country, viz: brood diseases, wintering and swarm control. While the first two are very real, the swarming problem comes home to every bee-keeper whether he realizes it or not. If his bees build up strong enough to gather a good crop of honey they are sure to develop the swarming impulse if left to themselves. If he cannot control this impulse to swarm, the bee-keeper must either spend a great deal of time watching for and hiving swarms, or else lose enough swarms to take the profit off his bee business. If he has any other work the swarming is more than likely to take place at the most inopportune time, e.g., when he is busy in the hay field at the back of the farm, or when he is on his way to church. Now all this is very expensive and quite unnecessary.

There is nothing on the farm which requires so little care in proportion to the returns as the bees. This is why they are so often kept at a loss; because the care they need is so small that it is utterly neglected. They require only a little attention, but what they do require they must have. It is to call attention to this bit of work and to help fit it into its proper place among the other farm duties that Cooperative Experiments in controlling the swarm have been undertaken in Ontario.

What might be called full reports were received from 25 experimenters last season. The average number of colonies which these experimenters used in experimental groups was 11.7. Each group according to instructions was divided into two lots, lot A and B, having an average of 5.8 colonies in each lot. Of the colonies in lot A, 18 per cent. cast first swarms. Of the colonies in lot B, 38 per cent. cast first swarms. It will be seen from this that while the experimenters could not be expected to entirely prevent swarming the first year, they have met with a marked degree of success in controlling the swarming impulse, reducing it from 38 per cent. to 18 per cent.

As a result of this control of swarming and the extra attention given to the colonies of lot A, the average return in honey was 83 pounds per colony as against 75.3 pounds per colony of lot B. Of those who carried the experiment through, 10 experimenters said that the colonies of lot A, are in better shape for wintering than lot B. Thirteen said they could see no difference, and two failed to report on this point.

The plan for 1911 is to send out the same experiment to those desiring it in the spring, and also experiment No. 2, which will be for the prevention of natural swarming in the production of Comb Honey. Persons interested in this work may get further information by writing to Morley Pettit, Agricultural College, Guelph, Ontario.

PROVIDING FOR THE WORKPEOPLE

Invalidity Insurance in England Will Not Conflict With Old Age Pensions

The English people are beginning to realize the vast importance of the Liberal Government's scheme of invalidity insurance, which is now being edgerly discussed in ever yfactory and workshop, mine and quarry, in the servants' hall of West-End mansions, and humble farm kitchens. The invalidity insurance, as proposed by the Government, is quite a thing apart from old age pensions and unemployment insurance. There is no idea of changing the basis of old age pensions as at present administered. Invalidity insurance is an extension only. Old age pensions of $1.25 a week will still be granted on a non-contributory basis to qualified persons over the age of seevaty. For this reason, the insurance scheme will come to an end at seventy, and there will be no overlapping. Contributions to invalidity insurance will begin at an age not lower than sixteen years and not higher than eighteen years. Again, invalidity insurance is quite distinct from unemployment insurance as outlined by the Board of Trade. Unemployment insurance is intended for men and women who are able and willing to work but cannot find a job. Invalidity insurance is meant for men and women who are debarred from working through continued ill-health. Unemployment insurance will be compulsory only for the building, shipbuilding, and engineering trades—that is, for two and a half million workers. Invalidity insurance will be compulsory and universal for all persons between the ages of sixteen or eighteen and seventy whose income is less than $800 a year. Unemployment insurance supplements the work of trade unions; invalidity insurance supplements the work of friendly societies. The details of the invalidity insurance are still secret. On November 4 Mr. Lloyd George handed a draft of it to Mr. Barnes, the Grand Master of the Manchester Unity of Odd-Fellows. The documents here, however, communicated on Cabinet terms, and Mr. Barnes was forbidden to make them public. Contributions to the scheme will, as in the case of unemployment insurance, be derived from the worker, the state, and the employer. The amount of the combined contribution is unknown, and the proportions to be paid by the three parties respectively is also not known. Conjecture has set one-half for the insured person, one-quarter for the employer, and one-quarter for the state.

WILL EXPLORE IN ANTARCTIC

Dr. A. Forbes Mackay Would Take Six Men With Him—Total Cost, $100,000

Dr. A. Forbes Mackay, London, submits a proposal for a new Antarctic expedition conducted along different lines from those followed by previous exploring enterprises at the southern end of the earth's surface. Dr. Mackay, it will be recalled, was a member of Sir Ernest Shackleton's expedition, on which he was attached to the landing party, being associated with Professor David in the journey from the winter quarters to the South Magnetic Pole. He proposes to explore the Antarctic coasts with a small party, provided with sledges and dogs. Travelling would be mainly on the sea ice, and they would rely on the Weddell seal for most of their food and all their fue.

The party would consist of six good men—the leader (who should be a navigator and surveyor), the second in command (who should also be a navigator), a geologist and mineralogist, a surgeon, and two handy men (who should have some experience of dog sledging). Only three sledges would be needed, and 24 dogs would be taken to draw them. The most serious difficulty likely to be encountered would probably take the form of a lofty range of mountains with steep seaward slopes ending in sheer cliffs without sea ice at their base. This obstacle could be circumvented by piercing the mountain ranges and ascending to the plateau behind them by way of a glacier, afterwards descending to the sea again by another glacier.

This system of exploration might be applied to any part of the Antarctic coasts, but the region which Dr. Mackay is most anxious to investigate is that lying between Graham Land and King Edward VII. Land, and the distance between these two places is roughly 2,000 miles. Dr. Mackay puts the average day's run at 10 miles. He believes that a ship should be able to land an exploring party in Graham Land or Alexander I. Land about the beginning of December. He estimates that the total cost of the expedition need not exceed $100,000, and considers that his plans could be admirably put into execution in connection with or as part of such an expedition as Dr. Bruce proposes.

CAPE TO CAIRO AUTO RACE

Four Thousand Gallons of Petrol Distributed Along the 5,800-Mile Course for the British Car

Four thousand gallons of petrol have already been distributed between Elizabethville, the existing railhead of the southern portion of the Cape to Cairo line, and Gondokoro, on the White Nile, to feed the British motor-car, in which Captain Bentley and his party willl leave Capetown on February 7 in a race against a German car to Cairo, a distance of 5,800 miles.

In the ordinary way the 25-h.p. car in which the British party will travel would run twenty-two miles on one gallon of spirit, but in the difficult country of Equatorial Africa a great deal of petrol will be consumed in necessary low-speed work. Two acetylene headlights, one movable searchlight, and three oil lamps, wil be carride in the car, the acetylene being conveyed in compressed form.

Each of the five men composing the expedition will carry a rifle and a revolver, with sixty rounds a rifle and twenty rounds of revolver ammunition apiece. Relays of ammunition will be stored at the petrol depots. A motor-bicycle will accompany the car, and the members of the expedition will take turns in using this for scouting and observation work.

The equipment of each man will weigh 15 pounds plus a gabardine tent sun and water-proof, which, with ground sheet will weigh 20 pounds, and a sleeping bag weighing 7 pounds. Altogether each man's kit will scale 42 pounds—that is to say 18 pounds under the government weight allowance for soldiers on active service.

From Gondokoro northwards to Khartum thes upplies will be provided by a small launch, which will journey up the White Nile, making frequent depots for the motor party. In the car will be carried a small supply of flexible steel ropes, saws, picks, shovels, and axes, in case of emergencies.

SENSATIONAL RUNS OF LUCK

One of the Latest "Wins" at Monte Carlo is Darnbrough, who Made $320,000

Now and again one hears authentic instances of large sums having been won at the gaming-tables at Monte Carlo.

One of the most fortunate players at Monte Carlo for a considerable time past has been Mr. W. Darnbrough, whose exploits figured in the newspapers a few days ago.

A Fortune in a Month

According to one of the London dailies he left with $320,000 in his pockets, as the result of a month's stay and play. But this did not represent all Mr. Darnbrough's winnings.

To go a little into details, on the opening day of his play he staked $6,000, and won all along the line. Emboldened by this success, he continued playing, winning again and again with marvellous luck.

At one period his credit balance amounted to no less than $465,000, but from this point Dame Fortune ceased to smile upon him. He steadily lost from $60,000 to $80,000 per day, until, recognising that luck had turned against him, he had sufficient strength of mind to turn his back on the tables and strike for home with the very substantial winnings that still remained.

On another occasion a certain well-known member of the London Stock Exchange was said to have walked off from Monte Carlo with little short of $200,000. This remarkable performance occasioned no small amount of excitement in the rooms, as such an unusual incident invariably does.

Beat on embarking in more or less of a "plunge," he went from one table to another, placing the maximum on the same number. Marvellous to relate, at each table this number came up.

The Man Who Broke the Bank

Recognizing that perhaps this might be his lucky day, the fortunate player wended his way to the gaming room and put the maximum on three of the tables there. To his amazement he found that at each he had selected the right color.

According to one of the head croupiers, this was the worst day that the rooms had had for some time. He gave it as his opinion, too, that what the London stockbroker had netted by his spirited play was little less than the amount above mentioned.

One of the most successful players at the Monte Carlo tables was Wells, who, according to the once popular music-hall song, "broke the bank" there. He was at the zenith of his fame about twenty years ago, when his doings—and winnings—were widely talked about and envied.

In ten days he was said to have made upwards of $200,000 at the tables after starting with so modest a capital as $2,000. It must not be forgotten, however, that Wells denied this at his trial, stating that all he made was $35,000 at three or four consecutive sittings. Even then he claimed to have in the end run out a loser.

The reader can take his choice of the two statements; but amongst frequenters of the rooms at Monte Carlo it is generally considered impossible to amass large winnings without risking large stakes. Even then the chances are a thousand to one in favor of the bank.

Yet there undoubtedly are occasionally wins running into four or five figures.

LIVING AT HIGH TENSION

To overdo in order to keep up with the parade is the tendency of the age.

Living at such a high tension, is it any wonder that our nerve sanitariums and rest cures are filled with nervous, overworked, broken-down men and women.

When one begins to get into this condition, there is only one cure — a complete rest, together with a wholesome diet and a good blood-making tonic and strength creator. There is nothing in this line that can possibly excel the medicinal elements of the cod's liver combined with tonic iron. This simple combination is found in Vinol. It contains no oil or grease and agrees with everyone.

A well known college professor states that he considers Vinol a truly wonderful tonic and strength creator. He was himself overworked and run down to a critical point. A friend asked him to try Vinol. He did so, and is now enjoying perfect health, and its curative powers cannot be too strongly extolled.

We recommend Vinol to build up and strengthen the run-down and overworked, weak women, old people, delicate children and convalescents. In case anyone is not satisfied after taking one bottle, we always refund their money. This does not happen, often, however, because Vinol's percentage of cures is very high. Miss Macdonald is an exceptionally bright speaker and will tell a most interesting story of the development of the girls and expansion of the work in the Flowery Kingdom. Definite announcements regarding her meetings will be made within a few days.

SUN LIFE OF CANADA

The figures which the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada places before our readers on another page tell of something more than mere size.

The increases shown in every line are large, very large, and make the Company's records of ten or twenty years ago, when it was considered to be, as it is even now, one of Canada's leading financial institutions, seem very small indeed; but mere size is not all.

From an insurer's point of view the very large amount distributed as profits, together with the prudence of management as shown by the reserves accumulated and the reduction in ratio of expense, are features which will be appreciated.

The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada evidently is enjoying its full share of Canada's growth and prosperity, and its management is to be congratulated on the results of last year's business.

Stripe Voiles Will Be Popular For Spring & Summer Dresses

We Have Imported An Immense Range of These Charming Textures

Authorities agree that fancy stripe cotton voiles are to have a tremendous vogue during the Spring and Summer. Always anticipating the demand of fashion this store has imported a very extensive selection of these exquisitely draping materials.

Few fabrics are prettier than voiles. With all the appearance of airy delicacy, they possess surprising durability. They hang in long graceful folds, and yet do not become slimpsy after a little service.

The voiles which we have imported are unusually beautiful in weave and colouring. They are the prettiest we have ever seen. They have character and distinction and will make up into frocks of exceptional charm.

Colourings appropriate for practical garments and dressy costumes are both represented.

Good fortune in buying has resulted in values of surpassing excellence.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION HELD FIRST SESSION AT LIBRARY TO-DAY

clude that the duty of this Association and of all similar bodies, is to arouse the spirit of inquiry and then to put early at hand an inexpensive and sufficient means for its satisfaction. This putting at hand, and close at hand ,of the means of knowledge, is to my mind one of the most important features of the whole movement since the general and leisureless public cannot be expected to put on street attire and walk perhaps miles to get a book until and unless they have that desire for knowledge which amounts to a passion. It were better, however, in my humble opinion, that there should be no library than that it should be a novel or scandal reading centre. This form of literary dissipation is just as detrimental as any other form of dissipation and just as barren of good results. How many pupils have neglected their more serious studies on this account it would not be hard to estimate. However, I have touched upon this before, and in closing this annual address I would again lay stress upon the very great desirability of getting means of knowledge close to the people. Small branch libraries in shops in different quarters of the town and under intelligent supervision, moved about at intervals, would, I am persuaded, go far to solve the problem.

Next followed an address by Mr. Walter R. Nursey, Inspector of Public Libraries, on "What the Department of Education is Doing For the Libraries." He regretted that there were not more Librarians from this district present, as he considered that the librarian is the captain of the ship, so to speak, and it is of vital importance that they should be present. The Board of Education allows the expenses of one delegate from each district ,and a Library Board that does not send a delegate is liable to be penalized to the extent of five dollars.

The speaker also referred to the beautiful library building which now adorns the city of Peterborough, and referred to a library as being one of the greatest educational factors of the present day.

Andrew Carnegie has expended over fifty three millions to date for the building of Public Libraries, over two millions of that vast sum having been spent in Canada alone.

There is also a maximum grant of $200 given by the Provincial Board of Education to assist struggling libraries where the case warrants such action. In the State of New York there is a ratio of one library for every 50 thousand people, whereas in Canada we have one for every five thousand. There is also a Department maintained by the Board of Education known as the classification department. A librarian by applying to the Board of Education can secure the service of one of these classifyers who will come and classify the books in the library according to the decimal system, which is one of the best systems in vogue at the present time. The work is done at the expense of the Board of Education. He also referred to the struggling libraries and the means that had been taken by the government to help them.

An adjournment was then made for luncheon, which was served at Hooper's restaurant.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Column—

We notice in yesterday's paper that one at least of our merchants has the audacity to introduce the Harem skirt. Here is work for our White Ribboners and Moral Reform League. They should inaugurate among the women of our city a boycott of any and all merchants having anything to do with this breach of decency. If something is not done fashion will lead back to the feminine apparel of the South Sea Islanders, viz., a string of beads and nothing more.

PROPRIETY.

Dear Sir,—Kindly permit me through the columns of your paper to express my most sincere thanks and appreciation for the many evidences of sympathy which were extended to my mother, sisters and self on the occasion of the fatal accident which overtook my brother James at the Canadian General Electric Work on Thursday last. It was indeed a heavy and sudden blow for all of us and the one bright feature of the sad affair was the hearty and tender expressions of kindness and sympathy which were freely offered by all who knew him.

Especially do I wish to offer our sincere thanks to those who were his fellow workers and who not ony sent a beautiful floral tribute, but also accompanied his body to its last resting place.

On behalf of my mother and sisters, I desire to thank them, one and all, for their kindness and sympathy.

Yours truly,

GILBERT A. BORLAND.

UNTIMELY COLLAPSE OF INFANT INDUSTRY

About four years ago the Conservative club rooms on George street were opened with great eclat. These rooms were supposed to be established to provide a meeting place for Young Conservatives, to learn the most approved party tricks from a few seasoned mentors among their elders. How the purpose of these rooms was promoted, how they were used for their alleged purpose, is not quite unknown.

The rooms as a rallying point and base of political operations have been gradually falling into disfavour, till their usefulness passed away. Anyway, they have been dismantled, the furniture has passed into the hands of the second hand dealer, the key has been turned in the door and "Ichabod" is written over the proud portals. These facts are mentioned with regret, for it is painful to see one of our infant industries collapse.

HOCKEY

There will be a lively game of hockey at Brock street rink to-morrow afternoon, between the Normal School and Collegiate Institute teams. Honours have been even between the two teams this season. The Collegiate won the first game by six goals to 2 and the Normalites the second by the same score. To-morrow's battle decides the educational championship. It will be called at 5 o'clock, sharp.

INTERESTING PROGRAMME

A very original and interesting programme of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, etc., will be given in the S. A. Temple, Simcoe street, to-night, by local people, whose "talents" in this direction have hitherto been "hidden." The chair will be occupied by a gentleman well-known in the city but entirely new to the position. Avery enjoyable time is expected, and all are invited

WEDDING BELLS

MANN—NICHOLLS.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the residence of Mr. William Nicholls of Smith Township, yesterday, when his daughter, Miss Lottie Levina Nicholls was united in marriage to Mr. William John Mann of Smith Township, and son of Mrs. Jonathan Mann, Water street, Peterborough. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Cruikshanks of Bridgenorth, in the presence of the immediate friends of the contracting parties. The young couple were unattended. Mr. and Mrs. Mann left on the 4.38 C.P.R. train for Niagara Falls. On their return they will take up their residence at "Poplar Heights," Smith Township. The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome gold watch, while the bride's father presented her with a piano. The wedding gifts were unusually numerous, attesting to the popularity of the bride.

WOMEN SUFFER

More Than Men

Women have more than their share of the aches and pains that afflict humanity. They must "keep up," in spite of constantly aching backs, or headaches, dizzy spells, etc. Mrs. Edward Calwood, of 123 S. Harold street, Fort William, Ont., says:

"I suffered with dull, miserable pains, soreness across my back and in my sides for months. They would catch me so badly at times that I could scarcely move around. I would have dizzy spells and altogether, felt generally run down. After using a number of remedies without finding relief, I learned of Booth's Kidney Pills and found them an excellent remedy. They not only relieved me of the miserable pains and soreness in my back, but cured me of my kidney trouble."

Booth's Kidney Pills cure Backache, Dull Shooting Pains, Thick and Cloudy Urine, Gravel or Stone, Rheumatism and all diseases of the kidneys and bladder.

DOCTOR OF AGRICULTURE

President Creelman Would Have One in Every Community

President Creelman of the Agricultural College, Guelph, thinks there should be a Doctor of Agriculture in Ontario. Graduates in medicine, law, and theology must, on leaving college, go immediately into practice and give to the people, for a consideration, the benefit of their opinion on the subjects which they have for four or more years been perfecting themselves.

"We have," says President Creelman, "not for a moment expected the lawyer, the preacher, or the doctor to return to the old homestead and there, within four walls or inside the fences of the one hundred acres, make such a reputation for wisdom, for the saving of souls, or the healing of the sick, that persons needing such help will come there for it; and yet this is just what we are expecting of the graduates of our agricultural colleges. We are expecting them to take a run-down business and build it up, to make a success of it by personal effort, and at the same time, without sign or hope of financial assistance from anyone, to so impress the neighborhood that better farming will become the rule in that district. Have you stopped to think of this side of the question? The remedy is obvious. We must place a doctor of agriculture in every community, must arrange for him to spend all his time at the work, and must pay him according to his ability and the work he performs."

MAKING OF A DANCER

The Girl Must be Absolutely Physically Fit and a Hard Worker

Each note of dancing is taught by an expert. By and by the child dancer makes progress and her work becomes more difficult and exacting. At least she may have to practice for three hours in the morning, attend a rehearsal all the afternoon and dance in the two ballets at night.

From this it will be seen that the girl must be absolutely physically fit and that ther is no time for gadding about or pleasure or self indulgence. It is an absolutely true thing to say that the ballet brings up the most hard-working, honest, and clean-living class of girls in the world.

The discipline is such that it exacts with an iron hand the most stoic self-control. Promotion is slow and tedious, and is only earned by a very literal sweat of the brow. The girl has to work her way painfully and laboriously from the back to the front row.

Fred Farren tells how a young man once came to him and told him that, though he had never danced, he was very anxious to go on the stage, and asked how long it would take him to learn to dance. And this was the reply:

"I am not quite sure. I have been at it for twenty-four years and haven't finished learning yet."

So a little girl may join a school at the age of six, and still be learning to dance twenty years later.

Could there possibly be a harder apprenticeship than this?

But there are compensations. The child goes to a profession which pays a salary—certain, if small—every week in the year. Legitimate houses may close, musical comedies may fail, choruses may be thrown suddenly out of employment in the middle of the season, but the ballet is eternal and the wage is absolutely certain.

MASS MEETING FOR BOYS MARCH 19TH

There will be a mass meeting for boys and men at St. Andrew's church March 19, at 4.15 p.m.

"The lovely time of youth is our Italy and Greece, full of Gods, temples and bliss; and which, alas! so often Goths and Vandals stalk through and strip with their talons."

'Boys, come to St. Andrew's church Sunday, March 19th, at 4.15, and hear about the Goths and Vandals.'

Bring your fathers. They were boys once. Maybe they are boys yet. Sometimes "we do not count a man's years until he has nothing else to count."

Sunday schools requiring pledge cards for March 19th, may secure them from the W.C.T.U. Telephone for information.

TOO CHEAP

Why She Could Not Get Her Ideal Clergyman

A great lady in Scotland once did the late Dean Rorison, of St. Andrews, the honor of consulting him as to appointing a clergyman to a charge of which she was patroness. She said: "I wish you to understand the kind of man I want. He must be a gentleman; he must be musical and cultured. I want him to take an interest in the boys, to exercise a refining influence over the whole neighborhood; he must, of course, be a good preacher. Now, Dean, do you understand the kind of man I want?"

He said: "Yes, madam; I understand the kind of man you want. You want a St. Francis de Sales, plus a Liddon, plus an Archbishop of Canterbury, for $750 a year and a damp cottage, and you won't get him."

BIRD CHORUS AT DAWN

The bird chorus at dawn is of daily occurrence, and nothing quite like it is to be heard for the rest of the day. It begins and ends suddenly. After about an hour comparative silence falls; the day's work has begun—the serious business of seeking food, building nests, and tending the young. And whether it is because they are so particularly busy I do not know but there is no better time than the very early morning in all the day for watching birds. They are never so approachable as then, and, paddling about in the dew-laden grass, with unstockinged feet thrust into an old pair of tennis shoes, I have found myself on such friendly terms with them as I knew that, later in the day, they would not tolerate.

SEVEN LATER WONDERS

The Last of Modern Wonders is the Ship Lusitania

Of the seven modern wonderworks of the world not one is American, says a writer in "Harper's Magazine." One of them, 400 years old, has its inspiration in religion—St. Peter's at Rome, the largest church ever built; the second, 100 years old, is the greatest triumphal arch ever erected, commemorating the victories of the great conqueror Napoleon I.; the other five are modern engineering works. Of the utilitarian works the Suez Canal easily comes first. The next great engineering work was also French, the Eiffel Tower, rising 1,000 feet into the air. The third great wonder is the Firth of Forth Bridge. The fourth modern wonder is the St. Gothard tunnel, 12 miles long, under the Alps. The seventh and last of the modern wonders are twin cousin ships, the Lusitania and Mauretania.

CAUSES OF SEA TIDES

Attraction of the Sun and Moon Upon the Water

A correspondent of "Science Siftings" asks how does science explain the law of gravitation. Why do all bodies attract or repel each other? Why moon has influence upon tides? Can that be explained by opposite electrification of these two planets (moon and earth). The answer is that no explanation for the fact of the gravitation of matter has ever been found. The attraction of the sun and the moon upon the waters of the earth produces the tide. There is no reason to suppose that electricity has any part in the production of tides. On the side of the earth towards the moon, the water is nearer the moon than the solid earth, and is attracted more than the earth. This lifts the water up in a tide.

THE SOLDIER ARCHBISHOP

Dr. Maclagan's Good Story Against Himself

Born on the anniversary of Waterloo in 1826, it was suggested to the father of Dr. Maclagan, the ex-Archbishop of York, that the boy should be a soldier. "But it is Sunday," said the nurse; "he ought to be a minister." As events turned out the infant pleased both, for after serving four years in the Army his thoughts turned to the Church, and he ultimately became an Archbishop. He was a wonderful church-worker and a noted raconteur. Furthermore, he was not above telling a story against himself. Staying at the house of a well-known peer he, as his custom was, rose early to take a before-breakfast stroll, during which he met his host, and together they paced the gravel in front of the windows. Suddenly a voice cried from one of these: "George! George! Don't forget that you haven't brushed your teeth and you haven't said your prayers." The Archbishop, to whom these homely admonitions had been addressed by his wife, left, looking guilty, to perform these forgotten rites.

SUPPLEMENT CORN WITH CLOVER HAY

We supplement our corn with clover hay. We grow about 50 acres of hay every year and we expect it to give us 200 tons. Last year we had 225 tons, but we expect to get four tons to the acre and we almost always get it. We supplement that mixture of corn ensilage and clover with bran, gluten and oil cake meal and a little oats and I do not know anything that will beat that combination; bran as a basis, 600 pounds, oats about 100 pounds, gluten meal about 200 pounds and oil meal, 100 pounds.

If you cannot conveniently get both gluten and oil cake meal, one will take the place of the other. I would not advise your trying to put quite as much oil cake as you would gluten and if you cannot get the gluten, put in a couple hundred weight of oil cake with the bran and oats and if you cannot afford the oil cake, put in ground oats. This latter is a rather expensive feed and the only excuse for feeding oats with bran or shorts, is that it is the most palatable food you can give.

There is no meal food that will be so acceptable under all conditions to the cow as a little ground oats. I have seen what might be considered a very poor ration, giving good results provided it contained a fair supply of oats and if you want to make it exceptionally palatable, put a little water on it just before feeding. We do not recommend farmers to wet the food for the cows, but if you want to make a cow eat a lot more meal than she otherwise would, there is no more sure way of doing it than adding ground oats to the ration and putting water on it. She will eat 25 per cent. more than if you gave it to her dry.—Extract from an address at Perth.

SPLENDID ADDRESSES AT LIBRARY CONVENTION

Mr. S. J. Stubbs, School Inspector Mowat, Dr. Locke, Chief Librarian Toronto, and Mr. H. R. H. Kenner Were the Chief Speakers at Afternoon and Evening Sessions.

The afternoon session of the Public Library Institute yesterday, was a very interesting one, and a great amount of valuable information was imparted by the different speakers.

Dr. George H. Locke, Chief Librarian, Toronto, was the first speaker at this session. The more important of his remarks were as follows: "A library is an educational institution. We have lots of boys coming into our library that are helped to a very great extent in their studies by the knowledge they get at the library. The range of a library depends upon the range of books in it, and the nature of those books. We buy at an average of 15,000 books per year and every one goes through my hands. The buying of the books is one of the most difficult and important things in library work. The preservation of books is also important. Never buy books off a subscription book agent, for the simple reason that you can buy one of these books in two months from the time he offers it, for one third less than he asks for it. It stands to reason that this would be the case, for the agent has to have his expenses and salary paid and possibly a commission, and then the publisher must have a profit. Books of biography and travel also history, should never be purchased from book agents, as they can be purchased much cheaper in a short time. Books such as these are also printed on light paper, and for a library book they should be printed on heavy paper if you want them to live. I also think that a distributing centre, such as Peterborough or Lindsay, should make purchases for the smaller libraries. Say, in sending to the old country for books to the value of a $100.00 there is a considerable discount on a larger order, and if the smaller orders were all given to the before mentioned centres, they could send the orders altogether as one order.

The public should go after fiction, but if you have nothing else to offer.

The public should notgo after fiction, for them. There is a set of books I would recommend, "The Every Man's Library." I have a complete set.

The duration and life of a book is a most important thing to a library. The term, 'bound in leather' means bound in pig skin on the outside, which is the most durable of leather, and under the first signature, as we call it, there is a lining of linen. I buy practically no cloth bound books. I buy the paper bound, and then have them bound in leather, in the old country. This makes the strongest and most durable binding, and a book can be delivered on this side for $1.00.

Juvenile literature is hard to choose. Ther are very few good juvenile writers, and these books are generally of very poor binding. The poor binding was mentioned publicly, and now some of the book-binders are doing better. You need not discriminate much between boys and girls. Girls read practically the same kind of books as boys when they are young. Henty oboks and those that teach history, are alright, because the history taught in our schools is very dull, and that written by Henty is put in an interesting form. Some people have referred to Henty's books as not being true history. Well history is not simply a record of events. I think although Henty's books may not be true history, he brightens it and makes it interesting for the young people. The history of Canada written last year by Miss Laut, is the best history ever written.

The Public Library is for the purpose of getting the boys and girls to read. Read books even if you don't understand them. I believe, however, in keeping some class of books from the young people. I think there should be a restriction. Now, there is a tendency in boys to read books relative to the phenomena of daily existence—what makes a trolly car go, for instance. You can say electricity, but you are running around a stamp.

The question of purchasing periodicals for the library, is also an important one; I never buy any cheap class. I think people can buy the cheap ones for themselves. There are certain weekly journals worth buying also. There should, also, be some American and English newspapers in a library. We are in competition with anything that will keep the children in off the streets. All the evils of the world are done by people who have nothing to do.

Mr. S. J. Stubbs gave a very interesting talk on, "The Library As an Aid to Education."

Mr. Mowatt's Address.

Mr. A. Mowatt, B. A., Inspector of Public schools, gave a very instructive address on "The library in relation to our schools." In his address he said, "I suppose a generation ago, we would not be assembled to discuss this subject. But these modern times and the advancements of civilization is different. The public library is a place of recreation. The question is how best can the children receive aid from the library? I think the library should be free, and we should also have a children's corner, also; we should have periodicals for children."

"We should also have library bulletins stating what the attractions are. We want carefully selected books. The difficulty will be that the children will read too much. I think we should have restrictions prohibiting them from reading more than a certain number of books in a certain time."

"The teachers in our schools should be allowed the privilege of using the library books for the scholars, as the school libraries are not often suited to the taste of all the children. We do not let the children read enough poetry. There are lines that sink into the hearts and minds of the children, and come back to their memory after fifty years." Mr. Mowatt gave the titles of a number of books that would be suitable for children.

The officers then decided to hold the next annual meeting at Oshawa, and the afternoon session closed.

Evening Session.

The evening session of the Public Library Institute last night, was well attended. Mr. J. H. Burnham, presided.

Mr. H. R. H Kenner gave a lengthy address on "What is Liberal Education?" He gave a sort of history of education from the ancient age, up to the present modern times, and pointed out the advancements of education from the early ages. He stated that in the age of Chivalry, education was a secondary consideration. The people in those days gave their attention more to sports and athletics of all kinds, than they did to education. This was accounted for, probably by the fact that war was a daily sport, and if a man was a good soldier, it was not necessary for him to have an education. Then as the war times disappeared and the more civilized age began to manifest itself, the people gave more time to education in all its branches. It was some time, however, before education exhibited its benefits to mankind. The speaker pointed out the benefit of mathematics, and how this branch of education benefitted man. He pointed out the advantages of education, referring to the perfect form that could be received in this modern age, and used the examples of the earlier stages to explain the points he wished to make conspicuous. He pointed out the necessity of having an education at the present time to get along in business. He showed by examples, how, that it was just as necessary to have a good education in the present day, as it was to be a good soldier in the ancient age ;also how it gave a man a standing in life. He compared the educated man with the uneducated man, and showed the positions occupied by the two different classes.

In speaking of the different branches of education, Mr. Kenner showed how the different branches suited different kinds of work, and gave general information on what branch was best suited for that particular branch of work.

At the close of this eloquent and instructive address, Sheriff Hall moved a vote of thanks to the speaker. This was seconded by Mr. J. C. Shook. The audience also manifested their appreciation in no uncertain manner.

STORMY SESSION IN BRITISH PARLIAMENT

Sat for Nineteen Hours Discussing Land Clauses in Budget Bill---Unionists Threatened to Throw Nationalists Bodily Out of the House.

LONDON, ENG., MARCH 10.—One of the stormiest sessions of the Commons for years ended at ten o'clock this morning after nineteen hours continuous session spent in discussion of the land clauses of the budget bill. The Nationalist members proved obstreperous and got beyond the control of Hon. Winston Churchill, who was the government leader in the absence of Asquith and Lloyd George. On one occasion a Unionist member rose and said with the chairman's permission, the Opposition would get up and throw every Nationalist member bodily out of the Chamber. This caused a united stand by the Nationalists, who rose up and looked like assaulting some of the Unionists. Rioting looked imminent and the sergeant at arms and the police prepared for action, but eventually Churchill and the chairman obtained order by brilliant strategic rulings and advice. The government's clause went through without notable amendment.

FARMERS' BANK DEPENDED UPON THE KEELEY MINE

Examiner Special.

TORONTO, MARCH 10.—In the case of the Farmers' Bank against a local firm for the amount of a check to-day, ex-Manager Travers, who was a witness, said he depended on the Keeley mine to keep the bank afloat, and he still thought the Keeley mine a great asset. Judge Winchester remarked that it was hard to tell whether the mine was worth five hundred thousand dollars or five cents.

Figures Showing Growth Of Canada's Railways

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, MARCH 10.—It is expected that Hon. G. P. Graham will deliver a Railways and Canals budget speech in the House this afternoon. Some of the figures show the progress the Dominion is making in this line. The railway mileage in Canada this year has risen to 24,731 miles, an increase over last year of 637 miles. Under construction, including the Transcontinental Railway, are 4,500 miles. The capital invested is now $1,410,000,000, an increase over last year of 101 millions. The total expenditure on the G. T. P. to date, has been $94,000,000, and it is estimated the amount needed for completion is $50,000,000.

PETERBOROUGH MAN HAD A VERY NARROW ESCAPE

Mr. Napoleon Trombley of Peterborough, who, with a number of other Canadian General Electric Company employees, has been engaged in installing machinery at Niagara Falls had a very narrow escape from death in the explosion there last week, which killed a number of men. Mr. Trombley was standing alongside of one man who was instantly killed, every particle of clothing being blown off him, while his skin was literally flayed by the force of the shock. Strange to say Mr. Trombley escaped unhurt, although he was knocked off his feet by the explosion.

THREE MONTHS IN GAOL ON A THEFT CHARGE

Nicolo Basciano was sentenced to three months in the county gaol at hard labour in the police court this morning, for stealing castings from the C.G.E. Works. The charge of stealing the tools was not laid against him. His Worship Magistrate Dumble told the prisoner, through an interpreter, that the law protected the company from such infringements and that he would deal lightly with him, as it was his first offence. The court room was jammed full of Italians to witness the sentence of their friend.

THE DIFFERENCE.

A few days ago Mr. Blondin, Conservative Nationalist in the House of Commons, charged Mr. Lanctot of Richelieu, with having wrongfully used Government stores—paints, etc., and labour of Government employees in his own personal interests—used materials and work in building a house. Mr. Lanctot at once challenged the charge, denied its correctness, asserting that he paid full price for everything taken, and full price for all labour and demanded the fullest investigation, which is now being made.

Now for the contrast. In the Manitoba Legislature on Wednesday, Hon. Colin Campbell, Attorney-General in the Conservative Government of the province, was charged by Mr. T. H. Johnson, M. P. P., Winnipeg West, with "graft." Mr. Johnson alleged that Hon. Mr. Campbell had been using criminal labour to his own benefit and produced an affidavit from a former turnkey of the provincial jail, to the effect that Campbell had had squads of prisoners cutting wood, shovelling snow, beating carpets, etc. The official mentioned said he himself had charge of many of these squads during the five years he was connected with the jail, from 1902 to 1907, and affirmed that none of the prisoners had received any remuneration. All the pay he himself got was his official salary. The attorney-general listened to the charges in silence, making no defence whatever. An investigation was asked for but it was denied by the House going into Committee of Supply. Fancy what a howl would arise from the Conservative press and pocket loyalists if the conditions were reversed; if a Liberal government had choked off investigation as the Conservative Legislature of Manitoba has done.

LIVE STOCK VERSUS BABIES.

(Ottawa Free Press)

Dr. Helen MacMurchy of Toronto, states that among babes of a year old or less the death rate in England is 100 per thousand.

In New South Wales it is 72 per thousand.

In Ontario it is 125 per thousand.

"The Mother is always fighting dirt," declared Dr. MacMurchy in a report to the Ontario Government.

And the mother is always fighting ignorance, could almost be added.

Not only is the poor mother up against conditions which are unsanitary and unhealthful, but in many cases she does not know.

And the ignorance of the care of children extends from the lower to the middle and upper classes as well.

Governments in this country spend hundreds of thousands to teach the farmer how to raise colts and calves and pigs.

Not a dollar is spent to teach the mother how to rear her young.

The right seems to be breaking, however, and it is to be hoped that the Ontario Government will initiate steps to carry out the recommendations of its investigator.

Among the suggested remedies are stricter sanitary regulations, the registration of all births, and the education of the mother.

The greatest need seems ot be the education of the mother."

Herein is raised a more important question than reciprocity or tariffs. These have to do with our pockets; but the question of marriage of the fit or unfit has to do with the quality of our homes, the good or bad quality of our population, the matter that chiefly counts. By our system of lax marriage methods, fools, and persons tainted, or even rotten with hereditary diseases are permitted to intermarry and perpetuate another crop of fools and physical wrecks, without let or hindrance on the part of the authorities. All this is preventable; but there is so much mock-modesty regarding marriage and maternity that any consideration of the subject is either laughed off or tabooed as something shocking and indelicate. We require persons whose duty is to teach children the multiplication table to pass examinations and have proper certificates of qualification; a man to run a donkey-engine must be properly qualified and certificated. But we permit the halt, the lame, the blind, the idiotic, the physical and moral degenerate to enter into a contract which involves the perpetuation of an evil type of citizenship, without let or hindrance; we thus invite the most dangerous and hostile conditions of antagonism to sound intelligent, healthy and moral citizenship. We—that is the state—authority—invite, as Dr. McMurchy points out, cooperation with the decimating crime of race-suicide. We not only encourage the entry into the world of maimed and diseased infants, tainted with hereditary disease brought into the world to poison and pollute the stream of healthy citizenship, but we do more than that: we doom even healthy infants to destruction by permitting girls to become mothers, who have no more idea of how to rear—nurse, feed and clothe an infant than they have of running an astronomical observatory. It is no wonder that, taking into consideration the facilities for bringing into the world children handicapped with hereditary disease, and other physical disability, and the ignorance and incapacity of mothers, we have not only a big crop of degenarates, but we have, as Dr. McMurchy points out, in the healthy climate of Ontario, 125 children per thousand dying under the age of one year. Why not, then, in view of such a disgraceful situation, put our false modesty, our foolish tendency to regard love, courtship and marriage as a matter of jest and merriment, aside, and regard marriage, as it is, as the most solemn and momentous of human relationships. In stock-breeding, in breeding cattle, sheep and swine—in growing fruits and grains we recognize the general fact that pure, sound, parentage, and sound seed are the necessary essentials to success. Why disregard the principle in the breeding of men and women. Marriage is a divine institution, primarily intended, by the All-Father, no matter what may be the smirks and sniggers of the thoughtless, for the perpetuation of the human race under the best conditions. If we should provide, by law, that only the sound and capable mentally, physically and morally, be permitted to marry, we should have fewer imbeciles and physical and moral degenerates, if we should provide that no girl be permitted to enter through the gate of marriage, the new way to motherhood, without having the knowledge of how to discharge the duties of motherhood we should not have the terrible infant death rate of 125 per thousand.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

One cannot deny that reciprocity is popular in the West, when the leader of the Conservative Opposition in the Saskatchewan Legislature proposes a reciprocity of resultions in favour of reciprocity.

Toronto's journalistic rejoicing over electrically lighted streets, suggests the elation of the village newspaper of thirty years ago in other parts of Ontario when electricity first became a commercial commodity.

It must be painful to the yellow Conservative journals, who have read Messrs. Lloyd Harris and W. M. German out of the Liberal party, to know that these contumacious gentlemen had the effrontery to retain their usual welcome places in the Liberal caucus this morning.

It must be painful to the yellow Conservative journals, who have read Messrs. Lloyd Harris and W. M. German out of the Liberal party, to know that these contumacious gentlemen had the effrontery to retain their usual welcome place in the Liberal caucus this morning.

Dr. Pyne prides himself, remarks the Globe, on being Ontario's "first Orange Minister of Education." The order could do better by blindfolding the tyler at Grand Lodge and turning him loose among the delegates to pick another Orange Minister. The doctor is only a lemon.

Hon. Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister, touched the core of Liberalism when in referring to the government position on the trade agreement he said:

"If it is to be an abgunment with Sir William Van Horne and various other estimable 'Sirs' on the one side, and the toiling masses of the people on the other, there is no question as to where the Liberal party will be found."

An argument in favour of annexation is furnished by the Toronto News. A correspondent in Trafford, Pa., says he was asked by a native, if we had many newspapers in Canada. "For answer I showed him a copy of the good old News, for there is no paper here to compare with it." It wouldn't be a bad idea to annex a section of country that cannot produce a newspaper like the shrieking sheet the News has been, especially for the past month or so.

KEEPING WITHIN BOUNDS.

(Toronto Star.)

While the Ontario Legislature has no authority to attempt to exclude the Ontario farmer from the market of the United States, it has power to deal with the export of pulpwood. That power is expressly recognized in the agreement Mr. Fielding, in his speech, explaining this agreement said: "We have nothing to do with the Provincial regulations. These regulations have been made by the Provincial Governments in accordance with what they believed to be the best interests of their respective Provinces, and whether they are good or bad regulations was not for us to debate with our friends of the United States."

The rights of the Provinces in this respect are fully preserved, and Mr. Fielding freely admits that he has no authority, and does not even express an opinion on the regulations. In thus keeping strictly within the limits of his own powers and duties, Mr. Fielding shows a good example which the Ontario Government might follow with advantage. The Legislature has nothing to do with the agreement, except as it relates to the export of pulpwood. It has no power to prevent the export of wheat, barley, fish and vegetables, and the resolutions which have that object are clearly out of place.

WHY RECIPROCITY IS A COMMONSENSE PLAN

When There's a Good Fruit Crop in Canada, Big U. S. Market is Near—When Crop Fails, Free Trade Keeps Prices Down —Vote in Train Smoker Favoured Tariff Agreement.

(Toronto Star)

NEWMARKET, MARCH 9.—Questions of political economy do not usually monopolize smokers of the railway trains in Ontario. One is apt to hear a great deal about the weather, the crops, or the price of stock, and a quantity of more or less reliable information about the discovery of minerals and the future prospects of certain mining claims in which individual members of the miscellaneous group may be interested. Not so these days, however. There is but one live topic, and that is reciprocity.

A burly man in a coonskin coat takes up the thread of conversation something in this wise:

"It may be all right for some of them Western fellows, but I breed horses, and I look to the West as the best paying market. Now, if they are going to let the Montana horses in, and all those cheap American range broncbos flood the Canadian West, I'm going to lose my chance to ship work horses out there. Look at the distance I have to send them. Look at the freight. Why, us Ontario fellows won't be in it."

An Apt Retort.

It was an argument like that last night which aroused Mr. Evan Carter a traveller for a Guelph wholesale dealer in foreign and domestic fruits and vegetables.

"Now, see," said he to the horse breeder, "do you think that you have have any right to keep the homesteader in the West from buying horses from his next door neighbour just so as you can make a profit out of him and he'll pay $150 for a horse that cost you from $90 to $75? Why, doesn't it stand to common sense that the long haul you talk about is reason enough for letting the Montana horses come in—if they are good enough and cheap enough? Why don't you breed the high-class heavy horses?—there's a market for them right near home. You'll be sending them across to New York State if this deal goes through, and making good money out of them, too, besides having the satisfaction of turning out a darn sight more worthy class of stock."

"I've seen carloads of old, worn-out horses shipped West," put in another of the smokers; "horses with the heaves maybe, or gone in the legs, or something wrong with them somewhere. Out on the prairies the farmers pay $150 for those horses, because they can't get any better."

Stampeded Fruit Men.

The conversation switched presently from horses to fruit, and Mr. Carter, as a man in the business, took the lead.

"I think that all this growling over reciprocity put up by the Niagara fruit-growers was simply a stampede engineered by a well-known fruit-grower and canner. He sells canned fruit in the West, and he doesn't want the competition of the American canners. Why, the fruit growers as such won't have any competition to be afraid of. Suppose we had reciprocity right now. If it weren't for the duty I could have brought a carload of Southern strawberries into Toronto this week, another one in Hamilton, and another into Guelph. Did I do it? No; because I would have had to pay duty and put the retail price up to twenty-five cents a box. That's too high to make a quick clearance. Few people can afford that price. Yet, unless I get rid of that carload practically in one day those berries will spoil. So I don't bring them in. Now, can you tell me how Southern berries in the month of March are going to compete with Canadian strawberries?"

"And another thing I'll tell you. Ontario fruit, ripened in its own due season, has got them all beaten. Californian apple skins are tough; Californian celery is stringy; their peaches and plums and tomatoes can't begin to compete with ours for flavour once ours is ready for the market. What's the good of depriving ourselves of their early south-grown fruits and paying a duty on their winter fruits, like bananas and pineapples, or, on the dessert, nuts? We grow some walnuts of course. I know of a nice walnut plantation near Port Dover, down in Elgin, but I don't see why they can't be marketed as profitably as the American walnuts, with or without the duty.

Some Outrageous Prices.

A commercial traveller who represents a Toronto cloak manufacturing house on the road in the West, and who was covering the Northern territory in place of the regular salesman, told of the outrageous prices for apples and other fruits in British Columbia.

"Right in the towns of the famous Okanogon Valley," said he, "at the hotels, they serve stewed prunes because fresh fruit is too dear. Thirty-five cents a pound for apples in Vancouver! About three apples to the pound. I tell you the fruit-grower is a mighty independent man out there. He's too independent. It might be a good thing for the fellow who likes to eat an apple once in a while if they didn't have it quite so much all their own way."

Will Regulate Prices.

"Now, talking about apples," put in Mr. Carter, "Last fall Ontario apples were scare and poor. In consequence people were paying $5 to $7 a barrel for number twos and threes I drove out with a friend of mine one day to a farmer near Tara, in Bruce County, who had the only decent apples within 25 miles of Wiarton or Owen Sound. What do you think the old fellow wanted for them? They were piled loose in bulk on the floor of the barn. Six dollars a barrel—and number twos at that. The barrels are worth 40c a piece, and packing 40c, and after that comes the shipping. Now, don't you think that when apples fail in Ontario sometimes it would be all right for me to be able to ship them in here free of duty from somewhere else? When we have a crop there's no fear of not getting a market. We have the superior goods. We can sell them all right. The Ontario apple is hard to beat. Ontario has the U. S. skinned for all the fruit and vegetables we can grow. But when we are forced to pay $6 and $7 a barrel for wormy windfalls, that's different."

Dealers Get a Slice of It.

"I don't think it's the apple-growers who boost the prices—not every time," said a quiet man in the corner. I think the apple dealer must have a finger in the pie. I know I paid $1.35 a barrel for apples in Belle Ewart, where my family lives all summer, and the same apples cost me $5 and $6 in Toronto."

The Western traveller told of a Chinaman in British Columbia who cleared $2,700 a year from 2½ acres in fruit and hired others to do all the heavy labour. He got two crops of strawberries every year, and last year he got three.

"Take it all in all," said he, "I think to fruit-grower has a pretty good thing of it, and it won't hurt if the fruit consumer gets some consideration this trip."

There were five people in the smoker by this time besides the writer.

"Let's take a vote on this question and see where we stand," suggested he.

Three hands raised for reciprocity. "How about you?" they demanded of the silent man in the corner.

"Oh," said he, "I'm not saying."

The silent man is typical of many others. His notions have been severely jarred, and he is doing some extra thinking.

As for the fifth voter, he acted as scrutineer, and didn't need to declare himself; either.

"The Strange Case Of Eleanor Cuyler"

By KINGSLAND CROSBY

The President bowed gravely, and the banker went on: "They left the studio shortly before noon, and Mrs. Hazard started for my town house to do an errand, after agreeing to meet Eleanor at the Long Island ferry in time for the two-thirty tram. Eleanor boarded a surface car to do some shopping in Twenty-third St. As she did so Mrs. Hazard waved her good-bye, and she returned the salute."

Cuyler paused in his walk, and for a moment gazed absently at the great globe of the world, which stood to the right of the President's desk, in front of a case of reference-books, and near the door leading into the Cabinet-room.

"Since that moment," the father continued with an effort, "I can get no trace of her. . . . If you should ask me, sir, to point out on this globe the spot where my only child is now living, if indeed she be alive, I could not tell you."

The sinking of the banker's voice to a husky whisper, acted as a sudden stimulant to action: as a bugle call to the great, sympathetic heart across the room which had longed so deeply, so many years, for a child of its own to father, and love, and rejoice in.

The President rose from his chair, quiet as ever, calm, reserved, but tingling in every fibre of his being. "Mr. Cuyler," he said, his low voice fairly ringing with decision, "we will find your daughter! You may rest assured of that. Unless some accident has unhappily befallen, she will be restored to you alive and well."

"There has been no accident, sir. When she failed to meet Mrs. Hazard at the ferry it was supposed she would go to my country place by a later train. I spent Monday night and Tuesday night in town. Wednesday morning Mrs Hazard telephoned me of Eleanor's non-appearance. I requested her to telephone several friends in New Jersey, and up the Hudson and in Winchester County, thinking possibly the girl had suddenly changed her plans and forgot to tell her aunt. This Mrs. Hazard did, and notified me late Wednesday afternoon of her failure to get a trace of Eleanor."

"And then?" the President asked.

"Then I sent Johnson, my secretary, to all the hospitals looking after a mythical stenographer of my daughter's appearance. Johnson, of course, did not give his real name, or use mine."

"Did you notify the police, or call on a private detective agency?"

Cuyler shook his head.

"It would get into the newspapers at once," he said, "and that would be simply awful. Our lives, our home, our friends, our clothes, would be discussed and lied about; all sorts of innuendos would be thrown out with devilish cunning—that I had driven her from home, that she might be a victim of alcohol or cocaine—you know, Mr. President, you know," he concluded, scarcely trying to conceal a sigh of despair.

"Yes, I know—I know," the President assented, soberly, nodding his head.

"Therefore, sir," the financier continued, in tones of impressive gravity, "I have come to you at last to make a personal request. It is the first time I have ever asked a favour from an occupant of the exalted office you hold. I never would think of asking it but in this particular crisis. . . . To recover my daughter, Mr. President, I would kneel to the very beggar in the street."

The Executive made no response. None was needed. He waited in silence; motionless, except for the increasing light of hopefulness, courage, affection, in his beautiful eyes.

"I cannot call on the police, or on private detectives," Cuyler repeated. "But you can give me, by a single word, the far-reaching power of another organization of the kind; a body of men who have no equals, and who are to be trusted absolutely. . . . I ask, Mr President, the aid of the Federal Secret Service."

The quiet, self-contained man sitting opposite the great financier lowered his eyes in thought.

"There are difficulties in the way," he said, after a moment of silent consideration, "but they may be avoided. Of course the Secret Service is concerned only with Government matters, as you know. Yet, if it could serve you without interrupting secret operations, I would feel wholly justified in placing the Service at your disposal. This would be little enough in return for all you have done for our people, and for their Government, these twenty years past, Mr Cuyler. The world does not know, sir, the world will never know, perhaps, what you have done to uphold the financial integrity of this country, to strengthen the arms of an Administration after another."

"Please speak no more of that," Cuyler interrupted, moving uncomfortably in his chair. "I have simply tried to do my duty as a citizen—that is all. However," he added with decision, "if you can give me the assistance requested, I can, perhaps, execute a plan which I have carefully marked out."

"You may rest assured that your wishes will be gladly met," the President exclaimed. "It so happens that we have here in Washington, or very close to the city, the man whom I consider to be the most remarkable detective living in this country. He is not a regular member of the Secret Service, but through a proper financial arrangement the Government has the right to call on him for special work of a peculiarly difficult character. He is responsible to the Chief Consulting Officer of the Service.

"But to resume the map. We . . . matter. Under these circumstances he is wholly at liberty to do work for other people—but he very seldom can be induced to take up private cases. He prefers to work for the Government alone. I suggest that you communicate with Wotsirb, put your case in his hands, and let him go ahead exactly as he chooses. . . . Do this, and your daughter will be found."

"I'll follow your advice implicitly, Mr. President. And I thank you again!"

Cuyler rose from the chair and held out his hand.

"Wait a minute!" exclaimed the other, opening a secret drawer cunningly contrived at the edge of his desk. He took from the drawer a small box, and handed it to the visitor, who saw therein a leaden object—flattened, mis-shapen, but unquestionably a bullet.

"That," the President quietly remarked, "was fired at me two years ago. It crashed through the window there, missed my head by a few inches, and buried itself in the wall yonder, near the ceiling. This man, Wotsirb, was on the case in fifteen minutes, and by midnight had got trace of the poor demented creature who fired the shot. He was thrown off the trail for several days—our Secret Service then was far behind European standards—but regained it, and followed the unfortunate across the Canadian Arctic, over mountain ranges and rivers of Alaska, chased him in a war canoe across Behring Strait, on foot and on horseback through Siberia and China, and finally overtook him in Tibet, where native guards had just killed him as he was trying to enter the Forbidden City.

"Wotsirb was an hour late—but he brought back to me a snapshot photograph of the dead face, as proof of his work."

Moment by moment, during his recital, Cuyler had been growing more and more agitated; and as it was concluded he exclaimed in a whisper: "Good God, Mr. President- The country has never heard a word of this."

The return game between the Business Boys and Junior School boys teams was played last night and another good game was the result. Stewart and Horsfield were the best of the school boys, and Jackson and Bartley were the pick of the business boys. The school boys repeated their victory of a week ago and won by a score of 15 to 5. The junior team will now play the Educationalists Friday, March 17th, at 7.00 p.m.

To-night at 7.00 the Giants and Pirates of the City League will play a practice game.

The games scheduled in the City Basketball League for to-night are as follows: 8, Ponies meet the Whirlwinds, at 9 the Fairies will meet the fast Collegiate bunch. As these four teams are playing good ball, two good games should result.

The Midgets and Strikers meet to-night in a scheduled bowling game.

Chuck Tyner An Evangelist

Charlie Tyner of Toronto, one of that city's best known athletes, has become an evangelist, and preached his first ser mon in Oklahoma on Sunday.

Chuck Tyner commenced his athletic career as an Association football player. In 1900 he commenced to play Rugby with the Wellesley Juniors, and graduated into senior ranks three years ago. About that time he did a little amateur boxing and commenced to play hockey. He was a failure as a forward, so Freddie Summerhayes stuck him in goal in the Markham tournament. He made good and the next year Marlboro seniors grabbed him off. He became a wonder and after three years with them joined the Toronto professionals. From Toronto he went to Brantford, where he managed the Brantford pros, and played goal. He was also a good ball player and was no slouch at tennis and lacrosse. Tyner's two brothers are in the ministry. He is well known to Peterborough hockey fans.

THE "JOHN WESLEY" TEA WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Unique Affair Was Held in the George Street Methodist Church Last Night—Addresses by Judge Huycke and Mr. D. W. Dumble.

SPLENDID PROGRAMME

The John Wesley banquet, which was given under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Society of George Street Methodist church, last night, proved to be an unqualified success, while the sumptuous and dainty repast which was provided by the ladies, was all that could be desired. The tables were very prettily decorated with flowers, while the beautifying effect of the various coloured viands harmonized with the whole, the setting being completed by the addition of lighted candles placed along the tables at regular intervals. A bevy of ladies, each wearing a small white cap, in accordance with the predominating style of the 18th century, waited upon the visitors and, needless to say, they carried their duties to a successful issue. Tea was served from 7 p.m. until 8.30 and during that time the scene in the basement of the church was one of animation and gaiety. After supper had been served a very substantial programme was provided. Two very important features in connection with the programme were a couple of addresses by Mr. D. W. Dumble and his Honour Judge Huycke. Mr. Mulligan sang a number of Wesley's hymns, which were well rendered.

A reading of one of John Wesley's hymns was also given by Mrs. Pettit, who possesses a sweet, clear voice with a wonderful gift of expression. Rev. Mr. Couch occupied the chair, and needless to say his adaptability to fill a position of that nature is unrivalled.

"Taking a birdseye view over the world's history it is surprising how few men stand out prominently above their fellow men," said Mr. D. W. Dumble, during the course of an excellent address, entitled "What Wesley Did for Protestantism." The great mass of people are like the trees of the forest, the exceptions are like the great pines, whose tops tower high above the mass. Some of the prominent ones of the earth hold their places in history because of their great deeds, the inspiring motive being, in most cases, ambition and lust of power. Other great men left behind them great works in philosophy, literature or art, such men were Homer, Socrates, Plato, Virgil and Shakespeare. The world is richer because they lived. Their work is lasting, uplifting and helpful. Wesley antedated Booth by 130 years, and he created a greater and more revolutionary result, inasmuch as he entered upon his great labours at a time when England, nominally Christian, was in fact, irreligious and Godless. Out of Wesley's work came Booth, and his labours and the fruits of his labours, the Salvation Army. Wesley was a man of greater culture and refinement, but both were used by God for great religious accomplishments throughout the world. When Wesley entered upon his work as an Anglican clergyman the church was dead and vital religion was at a low ebb. The clergy were worldly, inattentive to their duties, committing their work to curates, while many of them lived far away from their parishes. The bulk of them were indolentthe most lifeless in Europe, most remiss of their labours in private, and the least sincere in their lives.

Wesley continued his labours and before his death, in 1791, he had, with wonderful skill, organized a church, which met the wants of the people, and which, without doubt was organized by God. The Methodist church in America is the strongest on the continent. It was not alone in the establishment of the so-called Methodist church that Wesley did his greatest work. The result of his labours was to quicken the old historic National Church of England and give it new life and power, all the churches were revived and blessed, and a new era came to England.

Judge Huycke's Address.

His Honour Judge Huycke was the next speaker on the programme. His address was entitled "The Influence of John Wesley on the National Life of England."

In his opening remarks the speaker referred to the eloquent address given by the previous speaker Mr. D. W. Dumble.

"There is a name greater than Britain," said Judge Huycke. It is the British Isles or the Greater Britain, of which we form a part. We must go back to the 18th century in order to grasp an idea of what the actual moral conditions of the nation were at that period in order to form a true conception in our minds of the vast magnitude of spiritual labour, which the moral reformation of the country would entail at that period. If we were asked as to what the monument—the true abiding monument of John Wesley was in the present day, we would most likely say the Methodist church. That would be a fitting monument, but that is not all. If we consider the whole Methodist church, taking a numerical value of it alone, we find at the time of John Wesley's death, there were about seventy thousand members, since that time it has increased a hundred fold, in Canada alone there is a ratio of one Methodist to every seven of the total population; while in the whole world, there are about forty million members of the Methodist church to-day.

John Wesley, said the speaker, was one of three brothers, namely: Samuel, Charles, and John, all of whom received a college education, they having passed through the portals of that historical educational institution known as Oxford University. John distinguished himself as a Greek scholar, and was made a "Fellow" of Oxford University. While there he formed a Club, known as the "Holy Club," the name "Methodist" was derived from this club, it being an interpretation of the Greek word method. Samuel became a counterpart of his father. He was a devout, decorous, Anglican high church man.

We find John Wesley in the centre, Charles on his right, and John Whitfield on the left, as they go travelling up and down the country, telling the story, as they knew it, to audiences of from fifteen to twenty thousand people, the majority of them being miners. John Whitfield was the orator of the day. Charles was more of a poetical nature and a lover of humanity. The audience would crowd around him, while he told the story, until the tears rolled down his cheeks. John's work was the most enduring. His work formed the nucleus of the foundation of the church of which he was the founder.

That was the century when England, Ireland and Scotland were united. That was the century that England lost the United States of America through a diplomatic blunder. It was a dark age, the middle classes were just beginning to rise out of the mud and slime in which they were immersed.

In conclusion, the speaker referred to the extensive movement towards reformation at this period, which was brought about by the evangelistic work of John Wesley and his followers.

A motion was then presented by Mrs. Campbell, that a vote of thanks be extended to those who were identified and responsible for the very instructive and enjoyable evening spent. It was seconded by Mrs. Kendry, and carried unanimously by the gathering.

The meeting was then brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature restores the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life. Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J. Derocher, 405 Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and eat well."

"The Very Best" Hardwood. Cut and Split to Order. The Ontario Coal Co., Limited

Of Local Interest

The following from the Middletown, Pa., Times, refers to a Peterborough lady, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McCoy, 220 Pearl avenue:

On Saturday evening Mrs. Ira R. Springer entertained at dinner the members of her Sunday school class and their wives in honour of one of their number, Mr. A. G. Caley, of London, Ontario.

Mr. Caley, who has charge of the S. H. Knox & Co's five and ten cent store in that city, arrived in town on Thursday with his bride, who was Miss McCoy, of Peterborough, Canada.

The dining room was tastefully decorated with the class colours, red and white, while the class flowers, carnations, graced the table. The class presented Mr. and Mrs. Caley with a handsome solid silver ladle, appropriately engraved as an expression of their friendship for their former associate.

The evening passed swiftly, enlivened by music and social intercourse and at a late hour the guests returned to their homes after wishing the guests of honour God speed on their journey and a long and happy life together.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Caley, of London, Ontario; Mr. and Mrs. James Y. Robson, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Adam Billet, Mr. and Mrs. William Fishburn, Mr. and Mrs. William Arnold, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Jacob May, all of town.

HIDDEN TALENTS

Social at the Temple Last Night Was Enjoyable Success

A concert was held last evening in the Salvation Army Temple, arranged by two lady soldiers of the corps, namely, Mrs. Walter Naish and Mrs. Gadd. It was under the name of a Hidden Talent concert. Mr. Trew was chairman of the evening, supported by Ensign Merritt. The programme consisted of vocal solos, instrumental solos and recitations, one feature being an imitation of a cornet solo by Mrs. Robinson. The evening was an enjoyable one and gave great credit to its promoters. Ensign Merritt closed the meeting with a word of thanks to all who took part, hoping to have a frequent repetition of the concert.

COURT CHEMONG

The semi-monthly meeting of the Court Chemong, No. 530, I.O.F., was held last night. A number of new members were initiated. The initiation ceremonies were performed by Bro. F. C. Cook C.R., and Bro. E. Mallet, D.H.C.R. After the general routine business was completed, the meeting took the form of a social evening, and a most enjoyable one it proved to be. The occasion was featured by a large attendance of members and friends.

The Tucker Bros. orchestra was in attendance and was a splendid addition to the entertaining element. A most enjoyable programme was given, the number being as follows:

Vocal solo—Miss Evans.
Violin solo—Mr. Simmonite.
Selection by the orchestra.
Vocal solo—Mr. Wilfred.
Instrumental solo—Mr. Bogstrom.
Piano solo—Mr. Simmonite.
Orchestral selection.
Comic song—Mr. Wilfred.
Piano solo—Mr. Bogstrom.
Two selections for the evening by Mr. G. Evans and Mr. Howarth.

At the close of the programme, refreshments were served by the ladies and a social time in general was indulged in. Parlour games of different kinds were played and tended to brighten the occasion.

VESTA VICTORIA AT "GRAND" TO-NIGHT

Vesta Victoria, the most famous of English comediennes ,and her company of twenty-four international artists, arrived in Peterborough this morning in her private car "Forrest." In speaking with her this noon the Examiner reporter found Miss Victoria to be a woman of charming personality, a plump little body with a decided English accent. When asked as to how she liked Canada, she replied, "How could I do anything else my boy, but like Canada. Isn't it a part of England, and are we not all happy together under the dear old Union Jack, believe me, the greatest flag on earth. While in Ottawa I was treated at Government house beautifully. Earl Grey and Lady Grey are most charming and lovable people and the people of Ottawa are very proud of them. I also met Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and had the pleasure of hearing his great speech on reciprocity. While I do not agree with all he said, still I have great admiration for this grand statesman. This is my first appearance in Canada, and I hope the people of this city will like me and my company to-night. I think they will, for Col. Thompson, my manager, has surrounded me with a magnificent organization.

Flywheel Dropped Off G.T.R. Engine

An accident occurred on the Grand Trunk Railroad this morning, which might have proved serious but for the mere fact that the train, to which the accident occurred, was nearing a station, and was therefore running slowly. When the No. 10 passenger train which leaves here at 8.30 a.m., was nearing Hastings this morning, the fly wheel on the engine dropped off, with the result that traffic was crippled for a number of hours. The auxiliary from Lindsay, in charge of Trainmaster McMillan, was rushed to the scene and the line was soon cleared. The damage was slight.

Bad Pair Get Four Years.

Toronto, March 10.—Four years in Kingston penitentiary and twenty lashes apiece was the dose handed out by Magistrate Denison yesterday to Carl Epstein and Charles Sandler, both of Montreal.

These two young men, 19 years of age, were found guilty on a charge of robbing and assaulting Lena Meller at 1 Plymouth avenue a week ago.

Sandler in the box admitted buying the chloroform but said it was with Epstein's money. He also blamed Epstein for the whole thing and said he was induced by him to go into the matter. He said Epstein took everything that was stolen.

Epstein took the box and blamed Sandler and said it was Sandler's own money that purchased the chloroform. Sandler took the money and the coat.

"I think they are a bad pair," said the colonel. "They will go to the penitentiary for four years each and also get twenty lashes, ten when they go there and ten when they have served half their sentence."

Eloped With Brother's Wife.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., March 10.—With the deportation yesterday of William Hall, a deserter from the U. S. army, a story of a brother's ingratitude was unfolded by Inspector Armstrong, of the Dominion Immigration Service.

Hall, after deserting his post at Fort Shelling, St. Paul, fled to the home of his brother James, at Fibre, Mich., where he lived with his wife and two small children. Finding on his arrival that his brother was absent in Saginaw, he importuned the wife to elope with him to Canada. With the knowledge that he was a dangerous character and was already wanted for shooting, and fearful of the consequences should she refuse, she started with him for Blind River, Ont., where her husband located them.

British Naval Estimates.

London, March 10.—The naval estimates issued last night provide for the expenditure of $241,962,500, an increase of $19,000,000 on the previous year. The cost of new construction is fixed at $75,319,385. The program includes five Dreadnoughts, three protected cruisers, one unarmored cruiser, 20 destroyers, six submarines, and an increase in the personnel of the navy of 3,000 men.

The naval building proposals have caused a good deal of discussion of late. According to the reports, the Admiralty wanted six new Dreadnoughts laid down this year. Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, favored five, but the radical section of the Cabinet and Liberal party insisted that four would suffice.

Magistrate's Name Was Forged.

Carleton Place, Ont., March 10.—Alf. James, a young man arrested at Smith's Falls, charged with attempting to pass a forged check on the Union Bank here on Monday, was committed for trial. Mayor Smythe held court in the place of Magistrate McNully, whose name was forged to a check for $365.50.

Shot Over Bag of Peanuts.

Chicago, March 10.—A quarrel over a bag of peanuts resulted in the probable fatal shooting of Fred. Meyer, in the presence of an after-theatre crowd. After a few words with Meyer, who was a railway ticket agent, W. D. Page, a bookkeeper, shot him through the brain, stepped over the body and started leisurely down the steps.

Hughes, of the Supreme Court of the United States, has been designated as head of the commission to investigate second-class postage rates, especially with reference to magazines. Former Solicitor-General Lawrence Maxwell, of Cincinnati, will be another member.

Doctor Led Night Riders.

Hopkinsville, Ky., March 10.—Alleged secrets of the "Night Rider" organization, which operated in the western Kentucky tobacco war of 1907, are laid bare in the confession of Milton Oliver, star witness in the trial of Dr. David Amos, prominent physician and alleged "general" of the Night Rider army which stormed Hopkinsville in 1907 and destroyed half a million dollars' worth of property. Oliver was brought here from his present home at Maropolis, Ill., under military escort.

DISCUSSES THE TARIFF

Sir James Whitney Brings it up in the Ontario Legislature—Valentine Stock Protests

OTHER SPEAKERS

Toronto, March 10.—Sir James Whitney moved an anti-reciprocity resolution in the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon. Visitors thronged the galleries, while wives of Cabinet Ministers and other privileged guests of the Speaker, occupied seats on the floor of the House.

For sixty-five minutes the Prime Minister vigorously criticized the Taft-Fielding pact. There was no apology needed for bringing the question before the Provincial House, as it directly affected the interests of the province. He could quote precedents in abundance if that were necessary. A former Government had even brought in a resolution asking for the abolition of the Dominion Senate.

It was at a time when Canada was at the zenith of prosperity, contentedly going her own way, that the President of the United States had declared that Canada was "at the parting of the ways."

"Who dares come to us and say that we are at the parting of the ways? How does it fit in with the situation in this country? I should like to hear from him from whom he heard that Canada was at the parting of the ways. Up to a few weeks ago the people of Canada were happy and contented and prosperous. And then comes the cryptic William from the head of a foreign state that they were at the parting of the ways, that a new pathway was opened up and they must choose."

Sir James attributed J. J. Hill's advocacy of reciprocity to his desire to deflect millions of bushels of grain from the Canadian west to the western states. He reviewed the insurgency movement in the Republican party in the United States, and argued that President Taft saw in the reciprocity move a way for discounting the Democratic tariff revision policy, and of furthering his own designs for the annexation of Canada. The widespread sentiment in the United States in favor of the annexation of Canada was demonstrated by resolutions of various state assemblies and the utterances of Champ Clark and other political leaders there.

The farmers of the United States were opposed to reciprocity, it was said, on the ground that it would lower prices there. If that was the case, the greater export of Canadian farm products would intensify the high cost of living, which has reached so extreme a point here already.

If this agreement was ratified and the traffic diverted to the south the rails of the Grand Trunk Pacific and C.P.R. would lie still and rust.

This was not a party question, and as a Canadian he was glad to notice that only one Liberal, in discussing it, had even referred to its effect on the future of his party. There was only one lonely, shrunken and shrivelled soul who, at the Toronto Board of Trade meeting, shrieked that they were voting against the Government.

In conclusion, Sir James declared his confidence that the people of Canada would, in the future as in the past, stand shoulder to shoulder with the other overseas British dependencies, proud of the British traditions, redolent with measures of greatness. Canada would continue steadfast for the permanence of British institutions and for the consolidation of the British Empire.

C. M. Bowman, North Bruce (Lib.), said that Sir John A. Macdonald was on record as expressing the view that a reciprocity treaty with the United States would round off and complete his trade policy.

R. R. Gamey declared that the reciprocity agreement meant "one step farther from the Union Jack, and one step nearer Uncle Sam. Not in its annexational effect. But as a gradual result of playing the commerce of Canada as a commercial instead of an independent national or British imperial basis.

The debate was resumed at the evening session by J. McEwing, Liberal, West Wellington. "The manufacturers," he said, "are afraid that if this tariff arrangement goes through it will be such a success that there will be an overwhelming demand for a general lowering of the tariff. This has been considered, and admitted by a great many of the manufacturers."

W. H. Hoyle, Conservative, North Toronto, replying to W. Proudfoot said: "They say Canadians are suspicious toward annexation. I ask why Canadians should not be suspicious. We have never had a commercial treaty with the United States but what we have found that Uncle Sam had a string attached to which he invariably pulled for the benefit of that republic."

Valentine Stock, Liberal, South Perth, thought it was not the Provincial Legislature's place to dictate to the Dominion Government. "Ontario has eighty-six members sent to Ottawa to represent her," he said.

INTO POLITICS.

Orange Lodge Will Vigorously Fight Bilingualism.

Barrie, March 10.—The Orange Order has plunged into politics. It has been accused of "dabbling" for years and years but it has now taken the "dive" to recover "the game as well as the name." Bi-lingual schools is to be the issue. The 600 odd delegates to the Grand Lodge of Ontario West unanimously pledged themselves to vote only for those candidates for the Legislature who will promise to abolish bi-lingual schools and are willing to confine the religious teachings in the schools to what the Department of Education authorizes.

The Pope's interdict regarding mixed marriages was volleyed at with cleared decks, but the discussion and the resolution resulting from it are withheld from publication. However, it was decided to ask for legislation from the Federal Government which will declare that a marriage legally contracted in any province shall be binding in any or all other provinces of the Dominion. This is a dead set against the canon law of Quebec.

Also there was the perennial resolution against Irish home rule.

Munroe Books In Court.

New York, March 10.—In the trial yesterday of George Munroe, for using the mail to defraud, Albert P. Smith, an accountant, who had made a special examination of the Munroe books for the Government, testified that on Dec. 31, 1907, just before the Munroes closed shop and fled to Canada, the liabilities over the assets amounted to $116,111. There were 12,428 shares of stock undelivered, of which 8,190 were shares of English Marconi Wireless. The firm at that date had but 101 shares of English Marconi. During the year 1907, the books showed that the Munroes had delivered 1,011 shares of Marconi Wireless. The cash on hand on Dec. 31, 1907, including bank accounts, amounted to $8.52.

Vast fortunes made selling popcorn and peanuts were cited by Munroe in his campaign to float a "boot black trust," according to the testimony of Walter M. Watson, who was recalled at the afternoon session. Watson testified that he received $10 a week salary as president of the Metropolitan Syndicate, a Munroe concern, the business of which he said was "nothing." Watson said he had carried 500,000 shares of the bootblack trust for Munroe.

Alaska Central Land Fraud.

Chicago, March 10.—Inside information on the most gigantic land fraud ever under investigation by the Government came to light with the seizure by special agents of books, correspondence, deeds and various documents at the offices of A. C. Frost, promoter of the Alaska Central Railway and of the receiver, George M. Seward.

The Government's claim is that original prospectors were never paid for their options. It is said that, after the Alaska Central went into the hands of a receiver, Labaree, one of Frost's agents, continued a manipulation of the coal land claims, and implicated several Canadians whom he represented in the United States Government land investigation. Two witnesses from Canada will arrive in Chicago to-day and go before Federal grand jury, which began an investigation yesterday morning.

John Hays Hammond Accused.

New York, March 10.—In a suit filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, John Hays Hammond, the rich mining engineer, friend of President Taft and by him appointed special ambassador to represent the United States at the coronation of King George V. of Great Britain, is charged with fraudulent dealings in connection with the affairs of the General Cotton Securities Co.

Included in the charges against Hammond and some of his associates are falsification of the minutes of the company, illegal removal of the assets of the company and permitting dummy directors to participate in carrying out an alleged conspiracy to wreck the company. Prospective profits of millions of dollars are involved.

Montreal, March 10.—Fred. Krutzberger, who, it is alleged, stole $57? from Davies, Limited, when he was manager of their Bleury street branch store, has been arrested in Chicago.

Conservatives Threatened Hold-up Tactics Against Reciprocity —Liberals Are Well Pleased

H. H. MILLER'S SPEECH

Ottawa, March 10.—The debate on the reciprocal trade agreement has once again settled into its stride. The division of Wednesday night, with its significant result, has temporarily disheartened the Opposition, and they are marking time for developments. On the other hand, supporters of the Government are well pleased and encouraged. It is recognized that the final registration of approval will result in additional strength to the Government, and that as the merits of the case develop in debate there is assurance of constant augmentation of popular approval.

There was a breeze over the information regarding the wages, prices of commodities in Canada supplied to members. Mr. Borden asked again that information be given the members similar to that afforded the U. S. Congress. He repeated that it was necessary in order to discuss the reciprocity agreement intelligently.

Mr. Fielding said such information had been compiled by an official of the Department of Labor and had been published some time ago.

Dr. Reid of Grenville said this was not what was wanted. If Mr. Fielding wanted to get the resolution through the House in decent time, he would find it better to produce the information. "We are going to get this information," he declared. "If we can't get it one way we will get it in another. If he can't bring down a pamphlet, he will have to give us the information in the House itself. It is his duty to do so."

H. H. Miller (South Grey), who moved the adjournment of the debate on the reciprocity agreement Wednesday, then resumed the discussion. He said that the agreement when it went into effect would tend to regulate the prices of commodities in both countries. He quoted statistics to show that the exports of the United States in cattle, beef, wheat, butter and other products of the farm were decreasing rapidly, and will soon be at the vanishing point.

Mr. Miller argued that if these predictions were to come true, it meant that the agreement would remain a permanent thing, and that when the day came when Canada's production would have increased by one hundredfold we would be very glad to have the big American market.

A. S. Goodeve (Kootenay), was especially severe on the manner in which the agreement was negotiated. He said the Government was desirous of detracting the attention of the people from the reign of graft and corruption that had prevailed. Two men had been sent to Washington. They had entered into a surreptitious agreement. When the announcement was made to the House, he observed that the "stage was prepared and the claquers were in the rear. At the psychological moment the Minister of Finance entered and laid his Pandoras box on the desk. Then after a few moments he rose, touched a spring, opened his box, and forthwith there emerged a Trojan horse." Loud laughter greeted this oratical bull.

London Club Raided.

London, Ont., March 10.—Information which came from the Mercer Reformatory and which was submitted in detail to the department at Toronto, caused the police here to get busy Wednesday night and a fashionable club, in which some of the members of twenty of London's best families belonged, was raided. The president of the club, who holds a responsible position, was charged with selling liquor without license, was fined and allowed to go on condition that the place is cleaned right out at once.

Prosecuting Hamilton Firm.

Hamilton, March 10.—The Dominion Government is prosecuting the Fowler's Canadian Co. on a charge of using boracic acid and other ingredients, contrary to law, in its pickling vats. Inspector Cook of Ottawa laid the information yesterday.

United States Mobilization to Offset Effect of Diaz's Death—No Bad Intent Says Taft

PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Washington, March 10.—That the administration has decided to dissemble no longer in its reasons for the sudden and unprecedented movement of troops to the Mexican border, is indicated by the following despatch, received last night from the staff correspondent of the Associated Press, dated Charlottesville, Va., through which place the President's train passed last night at 7.10 o'clock, reads in part as follows:

"All doubt as to the purpose of the Government in sending 20,000 troops to the Mexican border has at last been swept away. The United States has determined that the revolution in the republic to the south must end. The American troops have been sent to form a solid military wall along the Rio Grande to stop filibustering and to see that there is no further smuggling of arms and men across the international boundary.

There was little doubt in the minds of these (administration) officials that the true meaning of the "manoeuvres soon would be known, and the logical interpretation so quickly put on them of troops unquestionably disconcerted the administration officials from President Taft down.

The Washington Government unexpectedly found itself confronted by the necessity of throwing an army along the border line of Mexico to stop the source of supply to the revolutionists, and to be in a position to invade Mexico at a moment's notice in the event of the death of President Diaz or any other untoward circumstance which might precipitate general fighting or rioting.

Taft's Assurance.

Washington, D.C., March 10.—President Taft yesterday assured Mr. De Labarra, the Mexican ambassador to the United States, that the troops were in Texas for manoeuvres, and that there was nothing that should excite alarm or unusual interest.

The question of the safety of foreign interests in Mexico has been the subject of a formal discussion by foreign nations with the Government of the United States. This information was ascertained from official sources yesterday, but it was added that the discussions had been indefinite and did not reach the stage of representations.

Diaz In Good Health.

New York, March 10.—In view of renewed reports concerning President Diaz, it can be stated that a despatch from the Associated Press correspondent at Mexico City stated that he had personally seen the President on Tuesday night, when he was in apparent good health.

Another despatch received from Mexico City Wednesday night referred to President Diaz receiving Admiral Lajarte at 5 p.m., and later conferring at his town mansion with the governor of Guanajuato.

8,000,000 In Canada Now.

Ottawa, March 10.—"We hope and feel that the census of Canada to be taken this summer will show an increase in the population of the country over that of the last official census in 1901 of at least fifty per cent.," said Archibald Blue, census commissioner, yesterday morning. The work will be commenced on June 1st.

According to estimate, the census will show the total population of Canada to be nearly 8,000,000. In 1901 it was about 5,371,000. The estimate is largely based on the immigration figures for the past ten years, and the natural increase.

Mr. Blue said that he felt that the Maritime Provinces would show a slight increase. All the other provinces would show substantial increases.

Shot Wife and Self.

New York, March 10.—Revolver shots were heard in a private dining room in a small uptown hotel Wednesday night, and employes found W. Hall, a railroad clerk, who had come from Chicago on Tuesday, dead, and his wife, Bella, fatally wounded. A revolver was beside Hall's body, but a dozen cartridges in the woman's stocking puzzled the police.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents a box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's"

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

GIVEN AWAY.—Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, new revised Edition, is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 31 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

ENGLAND WANTS THEM

Preaching the Gospel of GIN PILLS in the Old Country

Canada's wheat fields are not the only things that are making our country talked about. A well known citizen of North Toronto has set the people of England talking about GIN PILLS, the great Canadian Kidney Cure. The old country has nothing like GIN PILLS and the missionary work done by Mr. and Mrs. Simpson is bearing fruit in the great demand which sufferers from Kidney Trouble are making for our own GIN PILLS.

DAVISVILLE, NORTH TORONTO.

"I have great pleasure in writing and recommending GIN PILLS. We have used them for the last two years and they have never failed us. We took GIN PILLS to the old country some time ago and gave some to relatives and friends and they have asked us to find out where they can buy GIN PILLS over there. Everyone was pleased with the pills and said that only two pills were needed to give relief. Will you let me know if you have any agents in England? I had a few pills left on my way back here and we gave them to a woman on board ship and she was much pleased with them. If I can be of any help to those suffering from Kidney Trouble in spreading this wonderful remedy—GIN PILLS—I am only too willing to offer my services."

A. SIMPSON.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50. If your dealer does not have them, send direct to us. Remember—GIN PILLS are guaranteed to give relief, if—after taking them you are not fully satisfied, simply return the empty boxes to your druggist and your money will be promptly refunded. Sample box free if you write us mentioning this paper. National Drug and Chemical Co., Dept. B., Toronto.

GIN PILLS are only mildly laxative. For Chronic Constipation, Bilious Attacks and Sick Headaches, something more active is required. If you feel the need of a gentle yet effective laxative and liver tonic, take NATIONAL LAZY LIVER PILLS. The Maternal Woman.

"There are comparatively few women not replete with maternal love, and, by the bye, take care if you meet with a girl who is not 'fond of children' not to marry her by any means. Some few there are who even make a boast that they 'cannot bear children'—that is, cannot endure them. I never knew a man who was good for much who had a dislike to little children, and I never knew a woman of that taste who was good for anything at all. I have seen a few such in the course of my life and I have never wished to see one of them a second time."—Corbett's "Advice to Young Men."

Newspaper Man on Board.

A Big Baby Farm.

What has been called the biggest baby farm in the world is situated at Moscow, and it is claimed that this institution shows an annual crop of some 14,000 babies, not to speak of that put out by a branch at St. Petersburg, which numbers 8,000. The Moscow Foundling asylum was founded by Empress Catherine II., and it is maintained, oddly enough, by a tax on playing cards. Servants in the red livery of the royal family guard its doors, and its accounts are carefully audited by the Russian treasury department. The buildings comprising this institution stand in a hollow square round a garden with trim lawn and trees, which forms a playground for the children. Youngsters of all sorts and sizes, from tender nurslings, who in the incubating rooms are just struggling into life, are tended by careful nurses and are as sure of good attention and wholesome food as any baby can need. About fifty babies are received every day, and after four weeks the nurses take them to their own homes in the villages.—New York Tribune.

The Salesman.

Young man, I had decided upon your immediate discharge. One big redeeming trait of your character as just now revealed restrains me. Your loyalty is all that saves you. Stick up for your house every time. A salesman's five cardinal points are loyalty, enthusiasm, hard work, persistence and tact. You have much of the first four and none of the last. Smooth yourself down. You talked to the lumber company man at the wrong time. When he said he was too busy you should have smiled and got out. You can only sell to a man when he is in the right mood.—Bookkeeper.

The Alternative.

A tramp went into a farmhouse recently, and, seeing no one but an old woman, he said in very fierce tones, "Give me a drink of milk or else"—

But a man came behind him suddenly and, catching him by the neck, said, "Else what?"

"Else water," said the tramp humbly.—London Tatler.

Govern Yourself.

He who is his own monarch contentedly sways the scepter over himself, not envying the glory to the crowned heads of the earth.—Sir Thomas Browne.

WEDDING BELLS

FARR—DRUMMOND.

A pretty, but quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's father, Mr. J. Drummond, "The Cedars," Otonabee, on March 8th at the hour of 4 o'clock p.m. when his eldest daughter, Amy, was united in the holy bonds of wedlock to Mr. Chas. Henry Farr, of Francis, Sask.

The bride, who was prettily attired in grey silk, entered the drawing room on the arm of her father, Mendelssohn's wedding march being played by Miss Russell, of Toronto. The couple were unattended. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. D. McDonald in the presence of the near friends and relatives of the contracting parties. After the friends had extended the customary congratulations the guests were conducted to the dining room, where a smartly prepared wedding luncheon was heartily enjoyed.

The many costly gifts displayed exhibited very clearly the high esteem in which the bride and groom were held in their respective neighbourhoods. The contracting parties are enjoying a short honeymoon in Western Ontario and upon their return they will prepare for their journey to their own home in Francis, where Mr. Farr is en gaged in western farming. They carry with them the hearty wishes of a host of friends for a happy and prosperous future.

"PIMPLES"

Broke Out All Over Her Face.

Pimples are caused, almost entirely, by bad blood, and there is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to get at the seat of the trouble by using a good reliable blood purifying medicine.

Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for 35 years, and is one of the very best blood medicines procurable. After using it you will find that the pimples have disappeared, and you will have a beautiful clear complexion.

Mrs. Robert McNab, Badjeros, Ont., writes:—"I am prestly pleased to report the benefit I have derived from the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. About a year ago I became so weak and run down I could scarcely walk, and pimples broke out all over my face. I tried one thing after another, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I was advised by a lady friend to try B.B.B., and before I had used one bottle I felt it was doing me good so I used three bottles, and I am now well and strong, and the pimples have all disappeared."

Ford Cars at the Automobile Show

Visitors at the Motor Show last week were so impressed with the exhibit of Ford Cars that hundreds were heard to say that they were the best value in the building by nearly $300.00.

Motor enthusiasts are realizing that the Ford car will do anything and go any place that any other car will. This is proved by the fact that the Ford Co. has seen fit to build 37,500 cars for 1911.

Is it any wonder, when you can buy a five passenger touring car for $975.00 and a roadster at $875.00, fully equipped and recognized as the most reliable, most silent running, economical car on the market?

It is guaranteed to go from eight to ten thousand miles on one set of tires. From 25 to 30 miles on a gallon of gasoline. To climb any hill on high gear that any other four cylinder car on the market will. To cost less than half for repairs.

You will never have to buy any battery, as it is run entirely by a magneto, which is guaranteed for the life time of the car.

If you intend purchasing a car, be sure and have a demonstration in a Ford before deciding.

Some New Regulations

When navigation opens on the Trent Canal this season, a new regulation will be enforced regarding traffic over the Hydraulic Lift Lock at Peterborough. It has been found by experience that the privilege of free lockage through the locks on the Canal has been abused, in so far as the Hydraulic Lift Lock is concerned, by the owners of small pleasure crafts. Consequently the Department has embodied in the rules and regulations governing Canals a regulation that gasoline yachts can be locked over the Hydraulic Lift Lock at Peterborough at certain hours each day only.

Gasoline yachts will be specially locked over the Lift Lock at 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. However, these small craft may be locked over at any other hour of the day along with an ordinary steamboat or other large vessel. As there are two daily boats plying between Peterborough and Stony Lake, besides various tugs and many excursion boats nearly every day, it will be readily seen that no serious inconvenience will be suffered by the owners of small crafts.

The fact is that the matter had to be regulated in some manner. It was unreasonable to expect a costly and intricate piece of work like the Hydraulic Lift Lock to be operated every time a small gasoline yacht hove in sight. Very often a gasoline yacht, with the sole object of providing a little amusement for its occupants, would be locked up the Canal, then after going up as far as Norwood Road, would turn around and return over the Lift Lock. No sooner would this be done than a second gasoline yacht would undertake the same performance. It is, therefore, with a view to lessening this evil that the new regulation is being put in force.

It is well that owners of gasoline yachts should become thoroughly acquainted with the rules in this respect. It simply means that gasoline yachts can be locked over the Lift Lock at 9 a.m. and 2 p.m., regardless of any other circumstances. In addition to this, however, they can also be locked through at any other hour during the day that a large boat may be passing up or down.

SUNKEN SAW-LOGS

Another regulation that is included in the revised rules and regulations is in regard to sunken logs in the navigation channel. This is a measure that will have special bearing on the Canal between Peterborough and Lakefield, and on the Scugog River between Lindsay and Sturgeon Lake. If deadheads or sunken logs are not removed by the lumbermen owning them, the Department will remove them, and they will become the property of the lumbermen again upon the payment of one dollar per log. This regulation the Department believes, will have the effect of making the lumbermen clean the river of all their sunken saw-logs. The danger of sunken logs to navigation interests has become very serious of late years, especially on the Scugog River, and the Department is determined to eliminate the evil in so far as they be able to do so.

Where They Have A Time

There may be some people who have complained that the present winter has been long and cold, but there are few who can say that it has not been a pleasant one. Ask a man from the back townships if he has not had a real jolly time during the past four or five months, and the chances are that he will reply, "Sure thing!"

Up around Nogey's Creek the young people have had a real good time at any rate. If you don't believe it just read the account of Joseph Oliver's dance, which he gave to his friends prior to his departure to reside at Beddow. The Nogey's Creek correspondent to the Bobcaygeon Independent says:

Jos. Oliver, our thrifty neighbor, has bought a farm in Somerville, near Baddow, and is moving his stock and chattels from Mrs. Wm. Oliver's farm near Tyes Mountain. Joe wants to be more to the front, and so before leaving, he invited his friends to look in Friday evening and have a time. Sure there was a time, and a big one at that. About forty were present. Two big sleighs drove by N. McIlmoyle and C. Brumwell and a lot of single cutters. There being lots of stable room, every horse was well taken care of. After the guests were welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver, Fred Brumwell took out his violin, and after a few squeeks to see whether she was not troubled with a cold, Albert St. Thomas was calling off, and everything went. Joe Henderson assisted in the calling off, so as to allow Albert a rest, for to do this job till six or seven next day is no easy snap. Along about twelve Mrs. Oliver, assisted by several ladies, served refreshments, tea and coffee, cakes, pies, sandwiches, in galore. It was fine. After the bountiful feast, dancing commenced again, with double vigor and more music. The autoharp was brought into commission, and with the violin the house was fairly shook. About daylight the guests began to hitch up to leave for home, all delighted with their evening's fun. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver will be much missed, but every wish goes with them in their new home.

Another gay time was spent at the Cedars, where the young ladies enjoyed a quilting. In the evening the young men arrived, and dancing was enjoyed. Refreshments were passed around, and a very enjoyable afternoon and evening was spent. Mrs. Crowe thanked the ladies for the splendid work done, finishing six quilts.

IS MAKING GOOD

(Lindsay Post.)

Mr. D. C. Trew the local poultry expert, is achieving a continental reputation as an authority in this great department.

Some time ago the Post announced that Mr. Trew had received an invitation from the Provincial Poultry and Pet Stock Association, British Columbia, asking him to officiate as judge at their great show to be held, Jan. 15th—20th, 1912. They asked for his terms and pressed him to accept. Mr. Trew after carefully considering the matter decided to accept and his terms were accepted by the executive. The show will be held in Vancouver.

This was followed up by a message from Mr. E. B. Cale, of New Westminster, asking Mr. Trew to try and visit British Columbia by Dec. 21st, as some of the smaller towns would like to secure his services as judge. Mr. Trew will also accede to the latter request.

This is a distant tribute to Mr. Trew's ability as a poultry expert and is also a compliment to the town, of which Mr. Trew is an honoured and respected citizen.

THINGS IN GENERAL

It is stated that the Millbrook flour mills which were destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, will not be rebuilt.

The Port Perry Star says: Along the lake men are seen daily fishing and some beautiful specimens of bass are being caught. The aggregate weight of three was 8 lbs. The time seems not far distant when Scugog lake will abound with the choicest fish.

Mr. Thompson, of Bobcaygeon, has plans out for the erection of a building to cover the entire site of the old hotel. It is hoped, says the Independent, that the new house will be ready for the coming season and will be a fine addition to the much needed tourist accommodations.

A correspondent from Haliburton says: About eight gallons of whiskey came up on the train for the races on the lake. There were seventeen empty flasks, and three empty bottles picked up on the race course after the races. There was a general drunk the night of the races.

The Canadian Northern Bridge piers across the River Trent at Trenton are about completed. From fifty to seventy-five men have been employed since the first of the year to build the nine piers during the winter, using the ice as a most convenient platform. It is stated that the Company are very anxious to put the superstructure in place, and it is expected that this will be completed by the first of May.

The plans and specifications of the new town hall in Omemee were open for the inspection of the public at R. J. Mulligan's drug store till last Saturday evening. The tenders for construction are to be submitted at once. Mr. J. C. Eaton is building the town hall and presenting it to the village.

While the Methodist choir was leading the large congregations on Sabbath evening in singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and other gospel songs, the devil was in the basement going through the pockets of their coats and their muffs and pocketing everything of value, says the Tweed News. One girl is out $1.45 and another lady is minus a muff and others lost other trifles.

The population having largely increased at Healy Falls since the Trent Canal construction work began, the need of a better postal service is the subject of very much discussion, and it is understood a petition is to be sent to the Dominion Government asking for a post office. It has been rumoured also that a building may be erected in which the Roman Catholic population may worship.

The Bancroft Times says: Mr. Wrightmyer of Belleville, an agent of the Children's Aid Society, was in Bancroft and vicinity for a few days last week, and when he left on Saturday he had twelve children under his care. Six of them, the oldest about twelve years, were taken from John Brathour, of Faraday. Mr. Wrightmeyer found the family, consisting of seven children and the parents living in a room about twelve feet square. This constituted their dining room, kitchen and bedroom. The bedding consisted of one straw tick and one quilt, and a three inch hole under the door kept them supplied with fresh air. Brathour owns a fairly good farm, has considerable stock about the premises and delivered a team of horses to a buyer here on Monday, for which he received $300. There was, therefore, no excuse on his part for neglecting his family in this way and now that his children have been taken from him he should be given a term in the Central on a bread and water diet.

A SEVERE CASE OF NEURALGIA

Cured After Long Years of Suffering by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

There is an excellent reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured the most severe cases of neuralgia, sciatica, and other complaints in the group that are known as disorders of the nerves. This group also includes St. Vitus' dance and paralysis, and the common state of extreme nervousness and excitability. Each of these complaints exist because there is something the matter with the nervous system. If the nerves have tone — are strong and healthy, you will not have any of these complaints. The reason Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure nervous disorders is that they restore weak, run-down nerves to their proper state of tone. They act both directly upon the nerves and on the blood supply. The highest medical authorities have noted that nervous troubles generally attack people who are bloodless and that the nerves are toned when the blood supply is renewed. It is thus seen that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure nervous disorders by curing the cause of the trouble.

Mrs. J. C. Adams, Norris Lake, Man., says: "I am writing you at my husband's request to let you know the great benefit Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been to him. He is a river driver and therefore much exposed to all kinds of weather and wetting. As a result he had an attack of rheumatism, and then to add to his misery a severe type of neuralgia set in, locating on the left side of the face, and causing him such terrible pain that it would drive him almost wild. He was treated by several doctors, and finally went to Winnipeg, where they blistered his head and applied hot plasters which really only added more to his misery, and he returned home still uncured. In this way he suffered for nearly six years, trying all sorts of medicine, but never finding a cure. One day while he was suffering I went to a store to get a liniment, but they did not have the kind I wanted, and the storekeeper asked me what I wanted it for. I told him about my husband and how he suffered, and he placed a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills on the counter saying, "Take my advice, this is what your husband should take." I took the Pills home with me and my husband started taking them. I am not sure how many boxes he took but one thing is certain, they completely cured him, and he has never since had a touch of those torturing pains. You can tell how much he suffered when I say that the hair on the side of his head in which the pain was located turned quite gray. It looks odd, but he says it does not matter since the pain is gone. I believe he would not have been living now had Dr. Williams' Pink Pills not cured those terrible pains, and you may be sure we gratefully recommend them to all our friends and all suffering ones."

Sold by all dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

(16.) What, if any, difference is there in the character and disposition of children born in answer to prayer and children born under protest?

(17.) Verses 18-24—When sickness or death comes to the home how much value is there in conferring with a man of God? (This question must be answered by members of the club in writing.)

(18.) Verses 25-36 — When is it right, if ever, for us to say one thing while we mean another?

(19.) Verses 27-37—Would it ever be right or seemly, in these days, for a woman to act toward her Pastor as this woman did to Elisha when she met him?

(20.) The restoration of this lad was miraculous, but what would be the duty and privilege of a man of God to-day under similar circumstances?

"The Strange Case Of Eleanor Cuyler"

By KINGSLAND CROSBY

"No—and the country mustn't hear of it. . . . . I have told you in the absolute confidence investing all disclosure made in the Executive office, so that you may understand what this man Wotsirb is, and what he has done."

The President pressed a button on his desk. His secretary appeared almost instantly.

"Alberts, kindly get word out to Wotsirb at once that Mr. Cuyler has an important private matter needing immediate attention. Tell him, furthermore, it is my special and earnest request that he serve Mr. Cuyler's interests as he would serve mine in an emergency. Inform Mr. Cuyler at his hotel, without delay, what Wotsirb's reply is."

Alberts waited, expectant, but the President nodded dismissal, and he left the room, the banker following a moment later.

"Where can I telephone you, say in a quarter of an hour, Mr. Cuyler?" the secretary asked.

"At the Beecham."

"All right, sir. If Wotsirb is at home—he lives in the suburbs—you will hear from me by that time."

The secretary went back to his office and the banker stepped out upon the hot, steaming pavement.

IV.

He had scarcely reached his apartment on the fourth floor of his hotel when the telephone buzzed, and over it Alberts told him that the person they had spoken about would call at 2.30. It was then after 11, and Cuyler called up his New York office to talk with Johnson.

This confidential man, long in his employ, and something more than the usual private secretary, replied that there was no news. He had visited twenty public institutions without giving his name, to inquire after a hypothetical stenographer who was missing from her home, and that afternoon was to extend his search to Jersey City, Newark and Hoboken.

The financier listened with the intentness habitual to him, and, at the close of Johnson's report, briefly gave his orders.

"Keep on the same line until eight o'clock. Meet me in Jersey City on arrival of the Congressional Limited this evening."

He rang off, and sank into a great willow chair to rest for a few moments—the strain was beginning to tell on him. In half an hour he would call up his office again, talk with one of his junior partners about any important business matter that might have arisen, and be prepared to go over the situation regarding Eleanor with Wotsirb when the detective should appear.

Suddenly Cuyler bethought himself of food—he felt faint, and at first attributed this unusual condition to heat, fatigue, anxiety. Then he remembered that he had eaten no breakfast that morning, and had barely swallowed a mouthful of dinner at his club the evening previous. As a rule he ate nothing in the middle of the day, so he had fasted for more than twenty-six hours. He arose and started for the telephone to order luncheon sent to his apartment when again the buzzer rang, insistently, and the operator said:

"Mr Cuyler? One minute, please. New York wants you on the Long Distance."

The crackle of electric currents momentarily irritated the banker's ear, and then he recognized the voice of his right-hand man in his banking house.

"That you, Mr Cuyler? Yes, this is Bloodgood. After fairly strong opening the market suddenly sagged, and took a sharp, downward turn on vague, indefinite rumours that you had suffered a sunstroke and that the news was being concealed. At once a sharp, determined attack commenced all along the line. Almost everything went off five and six points, and it is getting worse. Seems to be a concerted, well-planned raid from some source—probably foreign, I think.

"The office is full of reporters, extra editions of the evening papers are out, and the Street is highly excited.

"What are your instructions?"

Cuyler glanced at his watch. Then he spoke clearly, decisively, briefly, as a general would, knowing his strength in a sudden engagement. For the moment everything else was forgotten, thrown instantly out of his mind—even Eleanor and the reason for his presence in a distant city.

"Send out strong supporting orders—you have forty minutes left before the market closes at noon. Pile them in. Give out an authoritative statement that I am away from town only for the day, that I have telephoned you this personally. If the situation demands it, add that I am in excellent health, that the opposition is evidently trying to take advantage of my temporary absence to create a scare, and that the whole thing looks like a regular happening of the 'silly season.' Tell the newspaper men I will be at the Metropolis Club at about nine-thirty to-night, and can see them if they wish to call there. . . . Anything further?"

"Nothing, sir," said Bloodgood. "Good-bye."

The banker hung up his telephone receiver, and again sat down, but this time he did not sink back wearily in an easy chair. Instead, he sat upright before a small table and gazed at its polished surface while rapidly canvassing the situation in Wall Street.

What a pack of hungry hounds they were, that opposition! Most of them rich enough already, and yet seizing upon his absence of a single day—and Saturday at that!—in order to knock down stocks in which they had absolutely no interest; securities owned and paid for by two hundred thousand men, and half that number of women, all over the world (but principally in this country), who had invested their hard-earned earnings in shares and bonds of scores of railroads, mines, manufacturing concerns, because he, Cuyler, was acting as financial trustee, backer, sponsor, for these great enterprises; and because that army of small investors had learned through his long lifetime that he never had misused and never would misuse such a trust, would never stoop to juggle securities for his own aggrandisement, and that his judgment of actual values was so clear, so sound, as to be well-nigh infallible.

"Bah!" Cuyler ejaculated, bringing down one great, hairy fist upon the shimmering, trembling table before him. "To think I have to spend time and thought fighting those curs!"

And he wished, for the thousandth time, that he could retire from active business, relieve himself of its cares and worries, throw off the killing anxieties that weighted down his every waking moment, and be for the short rest of his life a free man—free in the sense of that street sweeper down there below his windows, who worked eight hours steadily and then could go home to his wife and little ones for a long evening of happiness, and a night of sound, refreshing sleep.

"But I cannot," said Cuyler to himself, wearily pacing the floor.

There were too many people dependent upon him—aged men and women, a host of invalids, countless widows and helpless children, whose little was all in his trust. If he stopped work now his enemies and rivals would do almost anything to wrest control of those varied interests from his junior partners. These were good business men, keen, active of undaunted courage, and having trained each one of them in his own office, Cuyler felt sure that in the end they would win such an inevitable struggle, should he step down and out; but meantime, perhaps for several years, the value of railway and other securities allied with his name would be hammered, their earning power would decline, and thousands of innocent investors would be pinched because of lessened dividends. . . . . No, he must keep in the traces till he died at his desk. That is the way such men do die, and he knew it. . . . . He wished, though, that he could take a vacation for a month, or even for two weeks, like his under clerks and stenographers and office boys. Ordinarily it could be done—but with that anthracite strike threatening, with labour leaders, and mine workers, and operators so defiant, so determined not to yield an inch in their great struggle, a vacation was simply out of question. He held the balance of power, for it was his house which furnished supplies of war, whereby the mines could be operated successfully. Back of mine superintendent, operator, lessee, owner, stood Cuyler, financier. . . . . No, a vacation was impossible. In the late autumn or early winter, perhaps, but not now.

Disheartened, discouraged, exhausted, he threw himself upon a couch and fell into deep slumber. A bell-boy knocking on the door interrupted the nap. Could Mr. Cuyler see a gentleman—a person, that is, the bell boy added thoughtfully—who had an appointment at two-thirty.

Mr Cuyler could and would see him, and waited with considerable curiosity, while the servant went after the visitor, who appeared shortly, entered the room, closed the door, nodded carelessly to Cuyler, and sat down without saying a word.

Cuyler looked him over with one swift glance—a small, slender man, almost frail; complexion pink and white as a girl's; large blue eyes, quiet, devoid of vivacity; hair, moustache, beard, yellowish brown.

"May I ask who you are?" the banker finally inquired. "You forgot, doubtless, to send me your card."

"My name is Bristow."

"Briston?"

"Yes, that is my real name. My professional name is Bristow spelled backward."

"I see," said Cuyler.

"I asked Alberts for this note of introduction," the detective added, handing the other an envelope, the contents of which were quickly scanned.

"First of all, Mr. Cuyler, how long do you to be in Washington?"

"We have about an hour for this conference. I leave on the Congressional Limited."

"It's a short time," Wotsirb commented. "If we can't get through by then I'll go along to New York with you. Now fire ahead please, and pay no attention to me. I'll absorb every word you say. It's my habit, temperament—method of work, I mean."

Cuyler grinned. He was not accustomed to take orders from anyone, especially from an employee.

Then he remembered what the President had said about Wotsirb, and decided to regard him as he would regard counsel in an important legal contest—as a specialist whose advice must be followed. And having arrived at this sensible mental attitude, he told the detective all that he himself knew, and all that Mrs. Hazard knew about Eleanor's disappearance. The girl had entered a car at Seventh Avenue and Fifty-fifth street, at noon, the previous Monday. That was the last seen or heard of her. Cuyler also told what steps he had taken, through Johnson, to find her, and why he had appealed to the President for assistance. Keen, careful, logical, he went forward step by step, omitting nothing; for he knew that the slightest detail might be of first importance, perhaps, in solving the mystery. Every last bit is necessary to a complete structure, especially if it is complex, and Cuyler had planned and carried out too many great enterprises to be unmindful of this fact.

As the banker talked on and on without a break he watched his visitor closely, and wondered what manner of man he was, down in his inmost being.

Wotsirb sat loosely in his chair, hands on knees, shoulders and head slightly bent forward, gazing apparently into space. His yellowish hair and beard, his pink cheeks, half-parted lips, vacant blue eyes, suggested the poet, the dreamer, the religious enthusiast, who, with more of fire in his nature, might be a fanatic. He seemed to be anything but a man of action who could do things as well as imagine them.

Once, irritated by his visitor's seeming inattention, Cuyler stopped short his narrative, exclaiming:

"Do you follow me?"

"Perfectly," Wotsirb replied, without moving a muscle, other than those of speech.

"Can you remember all these particulars? Don't you want paper and pencil for making notes as I go along?"

For reply the detective started in with a sentence Cuyler had spoken ten minutes previous, and continued repeating word for word, inflection for inflection, every syllable which had followed. It was a marvellous feat.

"Now," he concluded, "I hope you are satisfied. I recollect everything: I forget nothing. I have an automatic memory, and my whole nature absorbs like a sponge that which I hear. It is nothing mysterious—I merely rely on the subconscious self. . . . . Kindly continue, and do not interrupt me again (unless I give the word) until your story is finished."

Cuyler started in his chair, and the other forestalled a possible angry response by asking in his quiet, monotonous voice:

"Have you engaged any new servants lately, or other employees, at your country place, or on board your yacht?"

"Possibly; I don't know . . . . . Why?"

"It is well to be cautious. Some such person might be planted in your household, acting as a spy, and sending your adversaries reports as to your course of action, and so on."

Cuyler stroked his moustache, thoughtfully. He was uncomfortable at the suggestion, but not alarmed in any way. He knew that officers of certain great corporations under his financial control employed scores of secret agents who posed as workmen in railways, mines, mills; and whose business was to keep the managers thereof informed as to the attitude of the men toward their bosses. In many instances these secret agents were high in the councils of labour unions.

"Anything else?" he inquired, laconically, as the other concluded.

"Nothing at present. I'm going with you to New York so as to ask some questions on the way. Hereafter I must be able to have immediate access to you at all times, day or night. I may never need to call upon you, but I must have the right to do so at any moment, in case of sudden emergency.

"From now on, however, I must work along my own lines. I will keep you informed of any development, any clue even that is well-founded if it would help ease your mind. On the other hand you may prosecute a search, if you choose, wholly independent of me. The first thing Monday morning you will place twenty-five thousand dollars to my credit, so I can draw on it freely for expenses, of which I shall keep and render you later an exact accounting. . . . Now it is time to start for the train."

At the railway station all of the afternoon papers were obtained, and Wotsirb sat reading them in the private drawing-room Cuyler had previously reserved in the second Pullman car, while the banker went forward to eat his long-delayed meal.

Just after the train pulled out of Baltimore Cuyler, feeling much better, rejoined the detective, who at once plunged into the question of Eleanor's disappearance.

"Now about this painter man; Sheldon Winthrop," he began. "Have you any reason to think him in love with your daughter?"

"None whatever."

"Supposing you to be mistaken—supposing that they are in love, would you oppose their marriage?"

"Not in the slightest. On the contrary, I should heartily approve of it. He is a fine fellow—we have known his family for twenty years and I always make him welcome when he comes to the house, which is not often, however."

"Good. I want to meet Sheldon Winthrop as soon as possible—to-night if it can be arranged. Your yacht, the Norseman, is where?"

"At the New York Yacht Club anchorage, awaiting orders. I expect to go on board about ten o'clock, after seeing the reporters at the Metropolis Club, and spend the night cruising in the Sound. . . . . It's pretty hot weather and I want to get a good night's sleep if I can."

Wotsirb nodded, and relapsed into silence. A few moments later he spoke again.

"I want you to wire Mr. Winthrop to meet you at your club this evening. I will be waiting in a cab outside. When he arrives you can send for me to come in, explain briefly your daughter's disappearance, and he and I will go away together for a talk."

As he concluded, Wotsirb handed Cuyler a telegraph blank which was quickly written on and returned to him.

"The chances are that Winthrop would not be in his studio such a hot night," Cuyler remarked, "or at his club, either. He's probably out of town somewhere over Sunday, but you can send the message anyhow, when the train stops at Philadelphia."

Nearly an hour remained while they were speeding northward, through Maryland and Delaware, and the detective used it to good advantage. His listlessness was gone now. Instead he was alert, keen, quick as Cuyler himself—he was seeking, not absorbing, information.

"With Mr. Winthrop out of the way as a possible suitor," he remarked, placing the telegram in his pocket, "do you think your daughter is in love with anyone else?"

"Positively not. Her relations with me have been of the closest a father could have with his child, even closer perhaps than would have been possible had her mother continued to live. She knows that I wish to see her happily married and that I would not object to any square, honest, self-respecting man, no matter what his financial or social status. . . . In spite of some appearances, I am pretty old-fashioned, Wotsirb, when it comes to love, marriage, home-life."

"Mr. Wotsirb," the detective quietly corrected, and the other man reddened again, but said nothing.

On sped the train and Wotsirb decided that one of the first things to do was to find out from a certain unobstructive gentleman who had membership in half a dozen uptown clubs, whether Mr Cuyler had been indiscreet enough to permit any unscrupulous young woman to cajole a promise of marriage from him — a very ordinary occurrence with rich, elderly widowers, and one likely to lead to all sorts of complications, including severance of family ties. He hardly thought Cuyler had been such a fool, but then you never can tell in such cases. However, the question could be answered off-hand, and definitely by the unobtrusive gentleman, who, because of his ability to acquire valuable information, received a considerable salary in the shape of interest payments on foreign bonds—which had cost him nothing and were held in trust for him by bankers in Paris.

It was this gentleman's business to know all about the love affairs of some who posed high in American finance. And in return for such information Wotsirb sometimes exchanged like data concerning promin-

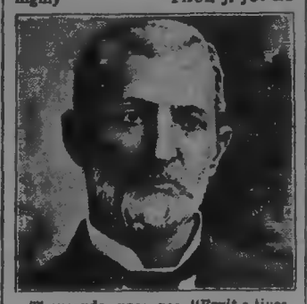
"I have been a sufferer for the past 25 years with Constipation, Indigestion and Catarrh of The Stomach. I tried many remedies and many doctors but derived no benefit whatever.

Finally I read an advertisement of "Fruit-a-tives". I decided to give "Fruit-a-tives" a trial and found they did exactly what was claimed for them.

I have now taken "Fruit-a-tives" for some months and find that they are the only remedy that does me good.

I have recommended "Fruit-a-tives" to a great many of my friends and I cannot praise these fruit tablets too highly" PAUL J. JONES



Thousands now use "Fruit-a-tives. Thousands more will try Fruit-a-tives" after reading the above letter. It proves, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that at last there is a cure for Constipation and Stomach Troubles.

"Fruit-a-tives" is Nature's cure for these diseases, being made of fruit juices and valuable tonics

"Bronchitis"

This is an acute inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the air tubes in the lungs.

The disease begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.

After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.

Mrs. D. J. McCormack, Cleveland, N.S., writes: "My little boy, two years old, caught a bad cold which developed into Bronchitis. He was so choked up he could hardly breathe. Reading about your wonderful medicine, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I decided to try a bottle, and with such good result I got another which completely cured him, without having a doctor. I cannot say too much in its praise and would not be without it in the house as I consider it a sure cure for Colds and Bronchitis.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

THE SPLITTER AT WORK.

Many persons like to cut their corn from the cob at table, and, as a rule, this is an awkward and sometimes a dangerous proceeding and never a graceful one. The new corn splitter recently invented is a simple and neat little contrivance that comes in plated and real silver for use at table in removing the grains of corn from the cob—that is, it doesn't remove them entirely, but extracts all the substance of the corn, leaving the kernels on the cob.

Home Course In Health Culture

First of a Series of Eighteen Articles

By EUGENE L. FISK, M. D.

I.—Fresh Air In the Home. Its Low Cost and High Value

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Dr. EUGENE L. FISK,
Author of "Home Course in Health Culture"

THE old Greek philosophers regarded air as a simple and unchangeable element like gold, silver, etc., and the problem of how air sustains life was certainly "Greek" to them.

This ignorance of the composition of air persisted until the latter part of the eighteenth century, when Priestley discovered that air is a mixture of gases, one of which, oxygen, is necessary to life. By experiment on animals he demonstrated that in passing through the lungs air parts with some of its oxygen to the blood and takes from the blood a poisonous gas—carbon dioxide. Priestley, of course, was not aware that air may also bring from the lungs and throat other organic impurities and the microbes of disease. As ignorance of these facts existed for thousands of years it is not strange that our ancestors builded their homes and ordered their lives entirely without regard to the value of fresh air. Even now, however, the old habits persist to some extent, and stuffy, overheated, ill ventilated rooms may be found in every community.

If fresh air were a high priced commodity there would be some excuse for not breathing it. But, except in the case of overcrowded tenement districts, pure air is within the reach of rich and poor alike, and neglect to obtain it can only arise from ignorance or indifference to bodily health. I suppose people may still be found who dread to breathe the "night air," who delight in "nice, warm," heavily curtained rooms, where the sunlight cannot fade the furniture and the winter air is rigidly excluded. I would invite the attention of such people to a few simple and easily demonstrated facts.

Fresh Air Facts.

In the first place, answering the possible query, "What has all this talk about fresh air done for humanity?" I would say that it has lowered the death rate from consumption over 40 per cent in the last thirty years. In the same period it has reduced the death rate among people under thirty years of age about 30 per cent. It has done so much that cautious, conservative scientific men are looking forward to a complete eradication of consumption and other communicable diseases and their banishment to the limbo where the "black death" and smallpox have been driven.

Pure air is composed of, approximately, seventy-nine parts nitrogen and twenty-one parts oxygen, a trace of carbon dioxide, vapor of water and minute quantities of other elements which have no known influence on the body. After air is expelled from the lungs it contains, as Priestley first demonstrated, an increased amount of carbon dioxide and a reduced amount of oxygen.

It has been estimated that each person requires 3,000 cubic feet of fresh air per hour if the proportion of carbon dioxide is to be kept below 6 parts in 10,000—the pure air limit.

It must not be thought that carbon dioxide in excess of that quantity is particularly harmful. If unmingled with other impurities it may be present in the proportion of 50 to 100 parts per 10,000 without endangering life. As usually present in dwelling rooms, schoolrooms, factories, etc. however, it is an index of the amount of other impurities exhaled from the lungs and skin.

Open country air has been found to contain only 3 parts per 10,000 carbon dioxide, while the air of a crowded schoolroom may contain twenty times that amount and be correspondingly vitiated by organic impurities, microbes and what has been well named the "sewage" of the lungs and skin.

Renewing Air In Rooms.

Even where a liberal air space is allotted to each individual it is necessary that the air of a room be completely changed at least once every hour. In schools and factories where there is limited air space per capita arrangements are often made for changing the air from five to seven times per hour.

One gas burner consumes as much oxygen as four and one-half men.

I have considered thus far the air poisons and deleterious matters derived from the human body. Other sources of contamination also exist and are a menace to health. I have mentioned vapor of water as an ingredient of pure air. This vapor is quite necessary to health, and its absence occasions a peculiar dryness of the skin and a stuffiness in the head which is often the first stage of a common cold. The cold is directly caused by microbes, but the system is laid open to their attacks by the conditions above described.

The absence of vapor of water is usually the result of faulty heating methods. A hot air furnace or stove will supply unduly dry air unless some device is used for supplying moisture. Such devices are ordinarily attached to furnaces in the form of a small reservoir opening into the air supply. Neglect to keep this reservoir filled with water is a serious mistake and may be responsible for much discomfort and illness. Where no such device is a part of the heating apparatus a vessel of water should be placed upon the stove or at some point where the hot air will pass over it and take up the moisture; otherwise it will take the moisture from the body.

The temperature in the house should not be allowed to rise above 68 degrees. Neglect of this precaution is frequently responsible for undue susceptibility to colds.

Some Ventilation Points.

In considering the practical problem of ventilation the following items are of most importance:

The most efficient means of ventilating, especially in the winter time, is the heating system. The hot air furnace, which insures a constant supply of fresh outside air, is the best system if the air is supplied direct to each room and the precautions taken to keep the air moist which I have already outlined. While this system does not provide for releasing bad air, this usually escapes through the cracks of doors and windows. It is desirable, however, to have open fireplaces wherever possible to insure the rapid escape of vitiated air. Where stoves are employed the air is not changed very rapidly, and the dangers of contamination from coal gas necessitate some special means of ventilation. An excellent measure is to raise the lower sash of a window about four inches and close the opening with an accurately fitting board. This will allow the air to come in between the two sashes without causing a draft. Two holes may be cut in this board and small boxes opening toward the ceiling placed over them.

As frequently as possible living rooms should be thoroughly ventilated by opening all windows and doors and rapidly and completely changing the air.

Where the hot water or steam system is used for heating the above precautions are also advisable, as such systems do not provide any means of ventilation.

Ventilating at Night.

The problem of ventilating at night is much simpler, but in all these matters common sense and caution must be used. In the winter time precautions should be taken against drafts, but a thorough ventilation of the sleeping rooms should be rigidly maintained regardless of the condition of the weather. It is usually possible to have free ventilation without draft by properly placing the bed. The ideal method, however, is to have a sleeping porch or balcony, where one may sleep practically in the open. Such a porch can easily be adjusted for protection from inclement weather.

Another method is the window tent. This is very much like an ordinary window awning, but is placed on the inside of the window, over the upper part of the sleeper's body, completely shutting him off from the air of the room. This method has the advantage of insuring the constant breathing of outside air without drafts and at the same time keeping the temperature of the room fairly warm.

Not more than one person should sleep in a small bedroom. If possible children should sleep alone and each child have a room to itself.

Trust him little who praises all, him less who censures all, and him least who is indifferent to all.—Lavater.

LAGRIPPE.

The greatest and most effective agents for the bodily health are the white corpuscles, phagocytes.

These white corpuscles eat any germ of disease that gains an entrance to the body, when they're in large enough numbers and sufficiently strong.

When they're not sufficiently strong, the disease germs devour them and disease holds the body.

For centuries almost, herbs, nature's own remedies, have been the most efficient foe to disease.

We have not known very definitely just how.

But now science tells us that certain of these herbs increase the number of the white corpuscles and their strength.

These certain herbs are incorporated in Psychine.

We go to the ends of the earth for these herbs—to Arabia, to South America, to China and to Japan.

They are compounded in the most costly chemical appliances in this country.

And the result is Psychine—for a third of a century the most effective vitality-builder the world has known.

The one preparation that has cured many thousands of the following diseases:

La Grippe	Bronchial Coughs
Bronchitis	Weak Lungs
Hemorrhages	Weak Voice

THE GERMAN EMPEROR'S HUMOR ❦ CHAT OF THE KING AND QUEEN

KAISER TELLS HIS WOES TO FARMERS

Humorous Account of Efforts to Improve Breed of Cows Greeted with Laughter.

(Special Dispatch.)

BERLIN, Saturday.—The German Emperor does not often indulge in humor or treat matters of public interest in a spirit of frivolity, but those who attended a recent meeting of the German Agricultural Society here are still talking about the Kaiser's lecture before that body which caused uproarious laughter and which at once stamped His Majesty as a humorist of some quality.

On the programme was a lecture on the draining of bog land, and His Majesty, who seemed to have completely recovered from his recent attack of "grip," listened with great attention to the discussion, and finally took part in it.

He left his seat, went to the lecturer's desk, drew out his notes and told of his efforts to redeem the bog land of his domain at Kadinen, between Dantzig and Königsberg. This land, he said, was five hundred acres in extent and was perfectly useless for cultivation, as incessant inundations had transformed it into a swamp. It was only good for shooting wild geese and roebuck, and it was often necessary to wade up to the thighs to reach the roebuck which had taken refuge in the water.

"I therefore resolved," continued the Kaiser, "to drain these lands. After great trouble I was able to persuade my steward to let me have the money necessary for this work." This statement on the part of the Kaiser was greeted with loud laughter.

"I then asked Herr Hugenbach, of Hamburg, how to improve the milk production at Kadinen, and he advised me to try a cross with the 'bos indicus' and the 'bos indicus major.' The name 'major,' however, does not," added the Kaiser amid laughter, "entitle the animal to staff rank."

The Minister of Agriculture, who was present, handed round colored plates illustrating the various breeds to which the Kaiser referred. His Majesty then said:—"I have not been able to bring actual photographs, as the beasts would not stand still"—a remark which caused hearty laughter. "As a consequence, I got my porcelain painter at the majolica factory at Kadinen to undertake the task of portraying them, and he sends us the parents with the child. (Loud laughter.) You, see, however, what a colossal animal has resulted (renewed laughter); but otherwise I am somewhat sceptical about cross breeds.

"I remember," continued the Kaiser, "an episode from my lieutenant days when it was proclaimed in front of a booth in the fair at Potsdam that here was to be seen a cross between a beaver and a duck. I gave my penny, and in the booth I found a man who stood before me in deepest grief and said:—

"'Lieutenant, it is dreadful; the child is dead, but the parents are still living.' (Great laughter.) I then asked to see the parents. The man thereupon showed me a large barrel, and said: 'Sometimes the beasts are outside, then you can see them; and sometimes they are inside, and then you cannot.'" (Renewed loud laughter.)

During his little lecture the Kaiser, putting on his eyeglasses, consulted his notes. His voice was slightly husky, but otherwise he seemed in excellent health. He concluded his speech by stating that his experiments in drainage had had considerable effect with the neighboring proprietors, many of whom had followed his example.

When the Kaiser resumed his seat the president called upon the audience to give three cheers for His Majesty. These were enthusiastically given, and the meeting adjourned.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S STATUE IS LIKED

Royal Family Satisfied with the Likeness as Reproduced in Splendid Memorial.

[Special Despatch.]

London, Saturday.

THERE is to be a very imposing function in the month of May, when King George will unveil the national memorial to Queen Victoria, opposite Buckingham Palace, which has been in process of erection for eight years.

Already the statue of the Queen, which is the "clou" of the whole structure, is in position. It represents Queen Victoria seated, and is said to be an excellent likeness. Several of the royal family, including the Duke of Connaught, have mounted the scaffolding that still hides the memorial, and have expressed themselves much pleased with the statue.

The opening ceremony will be performed in full state, all the royal family who are in England at the time being present, as well as the German Emperor, who has signified his wish to be present at the ceremony, and for whose sake mainly the date, May 16, is being set.

Emperor William and the Empress, as already cabled to your paper, will arrive in England on the day previous and during their brief stay will, of course, be the guests of the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace. They will probably stop Friday, the 19th, and one day of the ill be spent at Windsor Castle. A uet will be given in the Palace, ening, followed by a small official reception. Royal Entertainments Planned for Foreign Representatives in London from June 17 to June 30.

[SPECIAL DESPATCH.]

London, Saturday.

THE arrangements for the programme of entertainments which are to take place in connection with the coronation have now been so far advanced that it is possible to get a very fair idea of what is to happen in the course of the fourteen days' festivities, commencing on June 17 and terminating on June 30.

On June 17, 18 and 19 the representatives of the Courts of Europe will arrive in London, and on each of these evenings King George and Queen Mary will entertain them at dinner at Buckingham Palace, afterward holding receptions of the various suites. On Tuesday, June 20, their Majesties will receive the special envoys and delegations at the Palace, and in the evening the first of the State banquets will be held. In the forenoon of June 21 their Majesties will receive the Colonial Premiers and other representatives, and in the evening there will be a Colonial dinner, at which a member of the royal family, probably the Duke of Connaught, will preside.

Then on June 23 comes the coronation itself, on the evening of which day their Majesties will dine en famille.

PROCESSION THROUGH LONDON.

Friday, June 23, will be occupied mainly by the great procession through the streets of London, and on Saturday the King and Queen and all the royal guests will repair to Spithead for the great naval review, after which the Princes and royal guests will return to London. Their Majesties, in all probability, will remain at the coast until Monday, on which evening there is to be the gala performance at His Majesty's Theatre. Following that there are a couple of blank days yet to be filled up, and on June 29 the King and Queen are to attend a special service at St. Paul's Cathedral, followed by a luncheon at the Guildhall.

In the course of the two weeks there are, of course, to be many dinners and entertainments given by the most prominent peers and peeresses for the foreign princes and envoys. After the celebrations are over the court will remove to Windsor for a time.

It seems now definitely settled that Queen Alexandra will not attend the coronation in Westminster Abbey. In fact, there are some who say that she never had any intention of going at all, the reason being that she will still be in mourning and unequal to any State ceremonies. One imaginative newspaper they have some here—even went the length of trying to start the idea that Queen Alexandra would have a "black procession" of her own in the Abbey, Her Majesty and her attendants all appearing in mourning.

BUSY WITH ROBES.

Queen Mary gives her Mistress of the Robes the Duchess of Devonshire, many audiences just now, as between them they decide on all matters concerning the dress to be worn by Her Majesty's suite at the coronation. This is not likely to be identical with that worn by Queen Alexandra's suite on a similar occasion in 1902, although it will be influenced by the precedent. Queen Mary's train mantle will, for instance, be of a different shade of purple from the plum purple chosen by Queen Alexandra. The design embroidered upon it by members of the Ladies' Work Society will also differ. Princess Louise, who is an artist of some note, is taking keen interest in the work.

The Queen is introducing many changes into the routine of domestic service at the royal palaces. The largest amount of revision will occur at Buckingham Palace, which for many years has been to a great extent under the control of the administrative officials of the royal household. The presence in the palace of a family of young children has demanded the introduction of an element of homely domesticity which has not characterized Buckingham Palace traditions for more than half a century.

Some of the principles observed by Queen Victoria during her widowhood are being readjusted to modern conditions, and in other respects Queen Mary is giving effect to the democratic methods which have resulted from her personal studies in domestic science.

BROTHER JOHN THE MYSTERY OF SPAIN

Remarkable Man, Who Is the Guardian Angel of the Poor of Madrid, Goes Away.

[Special Despatch.]

Madrid, Saturday.—The Spanish press announces that Brother John—El Hermano Juan—has safely arrived in the Canary Islands on his way to the Argentine Republic. El Hermano Juan is the only known name of that extraordinary man, who for many years has been a figure of the Spanish capital and enjoyed an immense popularity throughout the peninsula. Nobody knows what family he comes from, nor even what part of the world he was born in. While some think him a Spaniard, others say he is a native of one of the South American republics.

About twenty-seven years ago he presented himself to the authorities of the Provincial Hospital in Madrid and asked permission to nurse the ill without remuneration. He was very well dressed, having all the appearances of a man of good social position. He refused to give information about himself, concealing his name and even his address.

As it is not uncommon in Spain for aristocratic or well to do people to serve for some time in hospitals or convents in order to fulfil a vow—a "promise," as they say here—made to some patron saint or to show their gratitude to the Almighty on recovering from a serious illness, his request was easily granted.

He asked to be called "Juan," and soon afterward the patients added to it the word "Brother" on account of the devotion and self-sacrifice he showed in caring for them. He always preferred to nurse cases of the most contagious diseases or to look after children.

But what drew most attention to him was that he spent large amounts of money in providing the sufferers with all the luxuries which the hospital could not give them, and in helping them when they left the hospital to face the hardships of life again. Moreover, he did not lose sight of them in after years, keeping in constant correspondence with his protégés.

Brother John soon came to be looked upon as the guardian angel of the hospital, and came into touch with all the wealthy patrons of the institution, and through them with many of the provincial authorities. This helped him a great deal in charitable work, as he was able to recommend many poor folk, whose good character he guaranteed, to men and women of influence who could find them suitable employment.

Where did Brother John's money come from? Nobody ever knew, for Brother John was not communicative. He received a great deal of mail from South America. That is all the hospital authorities ever knew. Very frequently, instead of giving money, he gave orders, written out on a common piece of paper and signed "Juan," addressed to a well known Madrid merchant, who always paid them on presentation. But the merchant would never answer questions as to John's identity, or tell why he honored his signature.

FATHER VAUGHAN FLAYS SOCIETY

Preacher Asserts Atonement Season Observed Only Because of Weather.

(Special Despatch.)

London, Saturday.

The modern Savonarola, Father Bernard Vaughan, in a discussion on society's observance of Lent, attributes the falling off in festivities not to hearts warm with sympathy with Christ, but because the weather is too cold for chiffon and lace.

"Instead of fasting," he said, "they have feasting. For self-denial they have substituted self-indulgence. In place of listening to God's word in the church they go abroad to worship the sun at the seaside.

Commenting on [illegible] statements of Father Vaughan and his attack on the custom of giving dinners, balls and theatre parties in Lent, the Pall Mall Gazette says:—

"Although one may hardly expect the ladies of Mayfair to fling their jewels in a charity heap, as did the women who listened to the Florentine Dominican four and a half centuries ago, there is no reason why we should not listen to his admonitions, as he is not an anchorite escaped from a Theban cave, but a shrewd observer of the levities of society, who sometimes overdoes pulpiteering and quotes physicians in favor of fasting, who say self-denial is good for the body as well as beneficial for the soul."

CHINA FAMINE IS TOLD BY PRIESTS

Frightful Conditions Facing Starving Millions, Who Beg Relief.

[Special Despatch.]

Tokio, January 29.

As already reported in a special cable despatch to your paper, the famous Japanese bacteriologist, discoverer of the plague bacillus, Professor Shibasaburo Kitasato, to-day granted to your correspondent a special interview, in the course of which he furnished a frank and outspoken statement of his views on the terrible epidemic known as lung plague, which is ravaging Manchuria and is now invading other provinces of the Chinese Empire.

Speaking in Japanese, the only European language in which he can converse with ease being German, he asked the correspondent to take particular note of the point that in the absence of exact data, collected at first hand, he was not prepared to speak dogmatically about the origin of the disease or to explain its exclusively pulmonary character. Therefore, the opinions which he might express must be subject to this reservation, since without exhaustive investigation he would not care to commit himself.

"Is there any difference," asked the correspondent, "between the bacillus of bubonic plague and that of the recent form of lung plague?"

"None whatever," was the emphatic reply. "I have this on the authority of the well known specialist Dr. Toyota, who has just returned from a trip to Harbin, undertaken at the request of the Chinese government with the object of investigating the epidemic there. He declares that the germs are identical."

"Then in your opinion the epidemic in this case is not being spread by rats?"

"No," said Professor Kitasato. "My explanation of the exclusively pulmonary character of the plague in Manchuria is simply this. Through direct contact with the germ infected skins of the tarbagan, let us suppose, a trapper contracted lung plague, the bacteria gaining access to the lungs through the mouth and respiratory organs. This trapper proceeds to Harbin and puts up at some cheap Chinese lodging house, the sanitary condition of which would be much the same as that of most places of a similar nature.

"As the symptoms began to manifest themselves he would expectorate germ laden phlegm, which, owing to the congested state of a sleeping room packed with dirty Chinese, might readily lodge on the garments of his nearest neighbor. Or it would be sufficient for him to cough in the face of another under such conditions. Any part of the body or dress thus infected, if then brought into contact with the mouth in any way, would promptly convey the bacillus to the lungs.

"From what you have said, you are not very sanguine regarding the prospect of an early abatement of the epidemic?" I said to Professor Kitasato.

"Emphatically not," was the reply. "On the contrary, I am of the opinion that the trouble is only in its infancy, and that its ravages will be terrible. There could be no more auspicious breeding ground for plague in these days than is China [illegible] may make such a comparison without offending you there the professor is genially the sanitary and hygienic conditions of China today are a sort on with those of Europe during the Dark and fourteenth centuries, when the ravages of the Black Death are known to have carried off at least a quarter [illegible] population.

KING GEORGE WINS WITH HIS ORATORY

Britain's Ruler Certain to Make a Favorable Impression on His Indian Subjects.

[Special Despatch.]

London, Saturday.

THE strange fashion of diplomatic etiquette has rendered it necessary for King George and Queen Mary to proceed to India all the way by sea, since it would be impossible, according to European custom, for their Majesties to take either the Marseilles or Brindisi route before they have made their official visits to the capitals of the countries that lie upon these routes. However favorable an impression King George may create upon his Indian subjects personally, he is certain to please them with his oratory, for the King is a fine speaker.

The purity of his Majesty's diction when he opened his first Parliament is still commented upon, and one noble Lord pointedly remarked that it is doubtful whether the "King's English" was ever better spoken from the throne.

While the King's oratorical abilities are familiar to his subjects it is not so generally known that he is a capital extemporaneous speaker. For example, on one occasion in opening a bazaar he began:

"When I came here I had quite a beautiful speech committed to memory, so that I thought I could repeat it backward if necessary. But alas! these charming surroundings have driven every word out of my head, and I am as helpless as a child which has lost its rudder. However, here goes," and forthwith he plunged into a spontaneous address so full of happy compliment and rollicking humor that his audience was alternately delighted and convulsed.

The King has offered White Lodge to Prince and Princess Alexander of Teck, and they will take up their residence there as soon as the present extensive alterations have been completed. PRINCE OF WALES IN WELSH CASTLE

Carnarvon Is Being Prepared Now for the Investiture Ceremonial in July.

[Special Despatch.]

London, Saturday.

CARNARVON Castle, where the first Prince of Wales was born, in 1284, is now undergoing extensive alterations and repairs in view of the investiture of the Prince of Wales in July. The portions that are being demolished are modern and are not in keeping with the ancient character of the building, which was erected by Edward I.

The most important work of demolition is at Queen Eleanor's Gate, where a great deal of modern masonry has been removed, exposing part of the structure which supported the drawbridge which was in use when the castle was occupied. The young Prince will stand at this gate and show himself to the multitude gathered below.

The ceremony of the investiture will take place in the centre of the castle, opposite the main entrance, and a great stage will be erected in front to accommodate about fifteen thousand persons. A prominent place will be allotted on a platform of one hundred, from which will give a programme of English and Welsh music. Paths and passages are being concreted and the old, worn out steps leading to the main entrance are being repaired with new ones, while the ivy, a picturesque, but most injurious feature of the towers, will be removed.

THE THRILLERS OF AVIATORS

Confessions of Some of the Famous Flying Men as to Their Most Exciting Moments

"Flying is one of the safest means of travel imaginable, providing that reasonable precautions are observed," said Wilbur Wright recently, and Mr. Grahame-White fully agrees with this view. At the same time, it would seem that, although every precaution is taken, it is impossible to ensure absolute safety from mishap. One of the most careful flyers to-day is Mr. Grahame-White, who has made hundreds of flights under all sorts of conditions. And yet he came to grief recently at Eastbourne.

An equally careful aviator is Mr. Le Blanc, whom Mr. Grahame-White defeated in the Gordon Bennett international speed race at Belmont Park, and who had a most marvellous escape from death at that meeting. He was flying at a pace of seventy miles an hour in a 100-h.p. Bleriot, which, he says, "is almost unmanageable without its full power. Suddenly, high in the air," continues Mr. Le Blanc, in his account of the incident, "my gasolene pipe jarred loose from the motor, and I was absolutely bereft of power—a plaything for the wind. I sat tight through a few terrible seconds, realizing that I had to fall, but hoping that I might fall on soft turf. Then a gust of wind caught the planes of my machine and hurled it against a telegraph pole at terrific speed. The machine struck the pole about twelve feet above ground, and struck so hard that the pole snapped in two places." Naturally, everybody expected that Mr. Le Blanc was killed outright, but, by a miracle, he escaped with only a few bruises.

A "Tough Time"

It was at Belmont Park, too, that Count de Lesseps had a thrilling escape. "I had soared up to a height of six thousand feet," he says, "when I seemed to be plunged into a cloud land. I could see nothing. I had no compass, and could not tell where I was heading, but I knew the only thing to do was to stay up where I was. After an hour—it seemed much longer to me—I finally got out of the clouds. At least I made out the hangars of my 'home tack,' and swooped down on them, but my troubles were not over, for a stiff wind had come up while I was above the clouds. My Bleriot is not very good in wind jockeying, and I had a tough time in getting back to earth. Once or twice I thought I was gone."

Hubert Latham's second attempt to cross the English Channel in a Blerlot furnished the biggest thrill of his life. "I started, he says, "in the morning from Calais cliffs, followed by a torpedo boat. The sea was smooth and grey. On and on I drove, when suddenly, to my horror, my engine began missing fire. I knew I would have to come down. There was no help for it, and down I plunged into the sea. As I struck the cold water I felt myself wondering if I was due for the bottom. But the aeroplane righted itself, and floated perfectly, I clambered as far out of the waves as I could and resolved to take things coolly. My aeroplane might sink at any moment, or I might be swept out to sea. The torpedo boat was not in sight. But finally the boat did come, and it was a glad moment when I was hauled out of the water, and the boat was headed for home with the aeroplane in tow."

Trapped In Mid-Air

That daring American aviator, Mr. Walter Brookins, tells of a thrilling experience he had at Atlantic City last year, when he reached the altitude of 5,675 feet, and then found himself without a drop of gasolene. "I had started out,' he says, "to smash the altitude record, and I knew I was higher than I had ever been before. The cold bothered me quite a little. The crowds of people were just a blur, and the ocean was just a bowlful of blue water.

"Suddenly my motor began skipping. First two cylinders stopped sparking. I thought the spark plugs were missing fire, but suddenly a thought came to me that fairly froze my blood—I had forgotten to fill my gasolene tank before I went up. I was trapped in mid-air with a helpless motor. Then the engine stopped altogether. I began to volplane down in long circles. I took great dives that made my hair stand on end, but I knew that I would have to keep cool if I came out alive. It seemed to me that I was shooting down at a rate of ninety-five miles an hour. All at once the long million-dollar pier loomed in front of me. If my machine wouldn't rise and clear it I was a goner. I set my rising planes, and the gallant little Wright roadster rose and cleared the obstruction like a horse taking a hurdle, and I landed safely on the sandy beach."

Imitation Cough Cures

Is an Imitation Cough Medicine Good Enough for Your Children?

When you are sick and send for the doctor you don't want him to send a young medical student he has in his office. You would rather have the young fellow experiment on somebody else.

No more do you want imitations of the medicine you know to be of proven value in the cure of disease.

The remarkable success of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the cure of croup, bronchitis and colds has proven too great a temptation to imitators. They expect you to take chances with their medicines because the price is a few cents.

Imitations are never sold on merit, but depend on the merit of the article they imitate. You don't want to be experimented on, and for this reason see that on every package the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, on the outside you buy.

What is made of simple ingredients of proven value, it is well suited for as a treatment for children. That it is effective in the cure of croup, bronchitis, whooping cough and the most severe coughs and colds is attested by its many years of continued success and enormous sales. 25 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

WHAT THE MINISTER SAID

Did Not Improve Matters for Calhoun Clay

A story has been told of a colored minister who, while holding a meeting in a chapel, became wrought up to such a high pitch of excitement that he cried out, "I see befo' me ten chicken-thieves, includin' Calhoun Clay!"

Instantly Calhoun Clay rose and left the church. He was very angry.

The next day he brought powerful influence to bear upon the minister, who promised to apologize.

So, at the meeting in the chapel the next evening the old minister said, "I desire to retract mah last night's remark when I said I see befo' me ten chicken-thieves, includin' Calhoun Clay. What I should have said, dear brethren and sistern, was—I see befo' me nine chicken-thieves, not includin' Calhoun Clay!"

TWO LOVE-MAKERS

How It Was that One of Them Won Out In the Race

Two young fellows were after a blonde. Number 1 could play eighteen holes in bogey and ride any jumper that ever wore a saddle. He was built like an ox. He wore his chest a few inches in front of himself, and no one could tell him where to get off. Inasmuch as he was a big, husky good-looker with all the manly accomplishments, he had a panel picture of himself leading Miss Blonde into a flat.

Number 2 belonged to the subduffer class, no matter what game he tackled. When he swung at a golf ball he usually hit himself on the ankle. In sailing a boat, he did not know a sheet from a sail. He ducked all kinds of athletic sports. In company he became mixed up and often had to be rescued. He was no rug performer, and he knew it.

Therefore, to avoid making too many breaks he would go to the blonde and confidentially ask her to be his true friend and steer him through the shoals. Number 1 would be sent out on the links, but Number 2 would remain under cover, and complain of feeling a trifle knocked out, and permit the blonde to put cold cloths on his head. Then he would give a couple of those long yearning looks and tell her that no one else had ever been quite so good to him.

Number 1 was trying to demonstrate that he was a dandy fellow, and Number 2 was trying to convince her that she was an ace of a girl.

"That poor boy needs a bright and clever woman to take care of him," said she. "He has learned to depend upon me, and it would be cruel to turn him adrift."

Number 2 won by a long way. The moral of this story is to star the lady, and she will discover your good points.

SANG AT HIS FUNERAL

Ficco's Voice Sounded from a Phonograph Record

We hear now and then of a man reading his own obituary in the papers, but it is a rare thing for a dead man to sing at his own funeral. Pietro Ficco, a shoemaker and amateur musician, had a very great fondness for the phonograph.

He purchased a good many records and occasionally sang into his own phonograph and kept records of the songs. He was taken seriously ill. He realized that he could not recover, and being a poor man and unable to afford much of a funeral he requested that his phonograph should be utilized to furnish the music for the funeral service.

He picked out the "Angel's Serenade" and Gounod's "Ave Maria," sung by himself, and these were used, and thus the dead man took an important part at his own funeral service. He instructed that his phonograph and seventy-two records, a number of them his own, should be sent to his mother in Italy.

NOT EASY TO INTOXICATE

RAILWAY MEN NOW HAVE OWN HOTEL

Built Jointly by the Companies for Benefit of Engineers and Those Working Excursion Trains

A novel hotel was opened in Blackpool, England, not long ago. It has been built by the joint railway companies for the benefit of their engine-drivers and guards working excursion trains into the town, and who have to stay over night. Hitherto they have had to find lodgings where they could, and in the height of the summer season this has been no easy matter.

In future they will be able to go to their own luxurious "Railway Hotel," where they will be able to obtain a good meal, a refreshing bath, and a quiet rest. The imposing premises are situated on the side of the line just before entering Central Station. There are about fifty bed-rooms, with space for a score more, if needed. Shops occupy the ground floor. The first floor is given over to a large reading-room and dining-room, fitted with fifty lockers, in which the men may store victuals they may take with them.

There are also a kitchen, half a dozen bath-rooms, and room for drying wet clothes. The dormitories are on the second and third floors, divided into cubicles. The roof is flat, and here the guests may recline on seats and enjoy the sun and sea air.

A BRAVE WOMAN

Her Wonderful Nerve With a Burglar in the House

A lady of wealth was one evening alone, with only one servant in the house. Being in her chamber, as she laid aside articles of jewellery and placed them in their appropriate places in the bureau, she chanced to raise her eyes to the mirror opposite, and from a light in the other corner of the room she caught in the mirror the reflection of the figure of a man curled up under a large centre table, but hidden from all sight save what was gained by this reflection in the mirror.

In this way she saw one of the hands resting on the floor. This hand was minus two fingers, and she knew at once that close by her was one of the most desperate characters, whose crimes and fiendish deeds had been the terror of the surrounding country for miles.

Now, who could blame her if she had screamed or made a hurried effort to reach the door? Had she done so it would have sealed her fate. But forcing herself to be calm, she finished what she was doing at the bureau, then quietly stepping to the bell, rang for the one servant in the house.

When the girl appeared she quietly said, "Mary, I want you to run over to Mr. —— (a jeweller in the neighborhood), and say I wish he would send back the diamonds he has been resetting; they are the most valuable I have, and I am uneasy to have them so long out of the house. Tell him to send them by you to-night, even if not finished; wait, I'll write a note for fear of mistake."

So seating herself with the greatest apparent composure at the table where the man lay concealed, she wrote the note. Of course, she wrote not for diamonds, but for help. The girl took the note, and alone absolutely, with this great terror concealed close by her, the lady waited.

That no suspicion might be aroused she busied herself putting various things in different places. How terrible must have been that waiting! How full of joy and safety the sound of the bell when the girl returned, and with her the friend and police, who captured the man before he could resist.

ANYTHING TO OBLIGE

Some Stories Told of the Well-Known Lord Fisher

There was no greater admirer of the qualities of Lord Fisher, who, having attained his seventieth birthday, retires from the active list of the Navy, than Queen Victoria. A delightful story is told of how, when a certain French admiral was about to pay a visit to Portsmouth—this was when Sir John was Admiral Superintendent at the dockyard—the Queen requested him to be sure and "be very nice" to the visitor. With a face as impassive as a Chinese mandarin the Admiral replied, "I'll kiss him if you wish it, ma'am!" Devoted to duty, Lord Fisher would brook no shirking from any man under him. A certain captain once sent word that it was impossible to get his ship to such and such a place on a given date. "Umph!" replied "Jacky Fisher," as he is known in the service. "Tell Captain Blank that if he is not ready to leave X—— on the day named I'll have him towed there."

"THE BETTER LAND"

Composed by Dr. Cowen, Who Always Has the Aid of His Pianette

Dr. F. H. Cowen, the famous musician, whose latest work, "The Veil," has been heard for the first time in London, was a young man of twenty-five when he wrote the music of "The Better Land." It was written in an hour or two, on the suggestion of the late Mme. Antoinette Sterling. Dr. Cowen was calling one day upon the popular vocalist, when she read Mrs. Hemans's poem to him, saying she thought it would make a beautiful song for her. When the score was sent to her next morning, Mme. Sterling liked it so much that she offered to buy the copyright from the composer—an unusual course for a singer to take; but to this, fortunately for his pocket, Dr. Cowen would not agree. Dr. Cowen has a mascot which he would not part with for untold gold. This is a little pianette which he has had since he was a boy of fourteen, and every work he has composed has been written with its aid.

Once you have used

PURITY FLOUR

you will readily pay the little more it may cost.

WESTERN CANADA FLOUR MILLS COMPANY — A PERFECT FLOUR — Purity — MANITOBA HARD WHEAT

Until you have actually tried PURITY FLOUR you may demur at the trifle more it costs you than lower grade flours cost——but your first sack will show you why that seemingly higher price is a real economy for you

PURITY FLOUR

That trial sack (which you ought to order this very day) will teach you what Purity Flour is worth to you, as contrasted with an ordinary flour.

PURITY FLOUR is milled from only the kernels of the choicest Manitoba hard wheat—the world's wheat standard.

From the 84 grain elevators which we own and operate, we select the finest wheat of the year's crop. This, at our mills, is so treated that only the most richly-nourishing part of the wheat berry gets into a PURITY sack or a PURITY barrel.

The result is a flour so strong that it produces more bread for the quantity used than ordinary flour

But bulk of product is not all you are to expect of PURITY FLOUR. You are to expect lighter, snowier bread; bread that has the nutlike, sweet, wholesome taste every housewife tries to put into the bread she bakes.

PURITY FLOUR, moreover, is not merely a bread flour. It is an every-purpose flour. It makes the kind of pastry you can be proud of—cake that invites praise—biscuits that suggest an encore.

Not only is PURITY the flour for economy's sake, you see, but the flour for quality baking. Thus, the few extra cents which it may cost you actually insures you against baking disappointments. PURITY FLOUR is the flour you will never be without, once you fully test its unusual merits.

Begin with a small trial sack, if you are dubious. Your grocer can supply you.

MY SYMPHONY

To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury, and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable; and wealthy, not rich; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently, act frankly; to listen to stars and birds, to babes and sages with open heart; to bear all cheerfully, do all bravely, await occasions, never hurry. In a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common. This is my symphony.—Channing.

RESCUE WORK FOR GIRLS

The Superintendent of Rescue Work in New York State writes:

We have to-day in the State, 101 superintendents of rescue work for girls and over 4,000 girls have been rescued, reformed and redeemed, and ten times as many have been warned of danger, pledged against beer and cider, which often are mediums by which girls are ruined.

Are all our white ribboners interested in this Christian women's work for women? Your state superintendent does not know, but asks you these pointed questions:

Are you interested? Are you praying? Are you working? Are you serving and saving girls? If not, why not? Why not begin now?

Dear Sisters,—Our state organization appointed me to demonstrate your interest and Christlike love for that saddest, most forlorn and forsaken class of daughters of men who are outcast because of their own weakness. Not only girls of degraded parentage reared in poverty and ignorance, but from homes of happiness and usefulness many girls have fallen down, down into depths of shame and sin. Oh! I am glad you sent me to their rescue. I am glad Christ makes their hearts receptive as I offer your sympathy and encouragement and His promise of a new heart and life.

Please pray for me. Pray more for me and the erring girls. Keep your light of faith burning on our noontide altar of prayer. I am so glad that all the time in this wide, wide world of ours its "Noontide" somewhere; therefore, constantly the incense of our longing hearts rises according to the will of our Father. Gladder, too, am I that because we are organized all over the world God's sun never sets upon W. C. T. U. pledged workers.

Watch your "moving picture" places; I find the darkness gives the enemy opportunities which he embraces to sow tares of immorality through evil thoughts.

AUTHORITATIVE STATEMENTS UPON PHASES OF TEMPERANCE REFORM

Father Doyle, the great Paulist priest, says:

"Of all the evils which have cursed mankind, crushed women's hearts, sent youth to destruction, driven virtue to the haunts of shame and paved the pathway to hell, there is nothing that can compare with the evil of intoxicating drink."

Bishop Brooks said:

"If we should sweep intemperance out of our country there would hardly be enough poverty left to give healthy exercise to our charitable impulses."

Dr. Edward Everett Hale said:

"If anybody will take charge of all Boston's poverty and crime which result from drunkenness, the South Church, of which I have the honour to be the minister, will alone take charge of all the rest of the poverty which needs relief in the city of Boston."

In 1884 the grand jury in the city of Philadelphia made the following formal statement:

"In the performance of our duty we have been deeply impressed with the fact that four-fifths, if not nine-tenths, of the 6,000 paupers and criminals which fill our public institutions are in their present sad and deplorable condition through the influence of intoxicating liquors. If we look beyond these institutions to determine the cost of the liquor traffic to this city; if we estimate the increase of the police force necessary to meet its requirements, the degradation emanating from the infamous pest-houses which it sustains, the idleness which it fosters, the wealth which it squanders and destroys, the poverty and disgrace which it entails, the burdens and expenses which it lays upon our courts of justice; and if we add to these the perpetual support of so large a number of paupers and criminals—the loss which we suffer is incalculable."

Literally hundreds of similar grand jury presentments have been made and published during the past twenty-five years.

Still another statement of similar character—and from the very highest of authority—may be referred to. Rendering the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Christiansen case already quoted in these articles, Justice Stephen J. Field said:

"By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community, there are few sources of crime and misery to society equal to the dramshop, where intoxicating liquors in small quantities, to be drunk at the time, are sold indiscriminately to all parties applying. The statistics of every state show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source."

The man who in the face of such utterances as these, which are but the veriest fragments of published testimony that would fill libraries, would attempt to argue that the drink traffic is not the destroying enemy of human happiness undertakes the task of proving that mankind, as represented by its brightest and best minds, has for centuries been laboring under a delusion. If human opinion proves anything, the drink business stands convicted of the destruction of human happiness. The public welfare demands the protection of human happiness. Therefore public welfare demands Prohibition. —Pioneer.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

Itching Scalp Falling Hair

To prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove dandruff, allay itching and irritation of the scalp, and promote the growth and beauty of the hair, frequent shampoos with Cuticura Soap, assisted by occasional dressings with Cuticura Ointment, succeed when other methods fail. Cuticura Soap and Ointment have been equally effective in the treatment of torturing, disfiguring scalp humors and the alarming loss of hair which so often results. For example, read how George E. Jefferson, 1318 Reed St., Philadelphia, tells of his remarkable case:

"My disease started with a little pimple on my head. Then it began to itch. The more I would scratch, the worse it grew until it spread all over my head. So I went to the doctor. But my head grew as raw as a piece of beef and my hair commenced to fall out in bunches. So I changed doctors. My head at this time was so sore I could not touch it. Then I decided to go to the hospital. They began to treat it but it improved very slowly. For over three years I was a sufferer from this disease. I thought all hopes of a permanent cure were impossible. A friend, upon seeing the condition of my head—which was a mass of running corruption—asked me if I had tried the Cuticura Remedies. I told him nothing would do me any good; but being very anxious to be cured, I decided to try them. The first treatment brought immediate relief. My hair became alive and stopped falling out, all the scale left and now I am perfectly well and have a full head of hair. I can truthfully say that it was entirely due to the use of the Cuticura Remedies."

THE FAMILY HEARTH

The crowning grace of home is cheerfulness.

Let method be your servant and not your master.

Look on the sunny side of your annoyances.

Street Impression.

The street impresses us with the fact that life is full of pretensions and sham. What subterfuge, what double dealing, what two-facedness! Do all the people who wish you good-morning really hope you a happy day? Do all the people who shake hands love each other. Are all those anxious about your health who inquire concerning it? Do all want to see you who ask you to call? Does all the world know half as much as it pretends to know? Is there not many a wretched stock of goods with a brilliant show window? Passing up and down these streets to your business and your work, are you not impressed with the fact that much of society is hollow and that there are subterfuges and pretensions? Oh, how many there are who swagger and strut, and how few people who are natural and walk. While fops simper and noble chuckle, and simpletons gaggle, how few people are natural and laugh. The confession and the libertine go down the street in beautiful apparel, while with the heart there are volcanoes of passion consuming their life away.

Best Way.

The speediest and easiest way to benefit mankind would be for every person to reform their own life, regardless of what others are doing. Such a policy would bring about a change for the better in both public and private affairs, and so after the relationship of mankind that everyone would strictly mind his own business. Meddlesome persons who are continually prying into other people's affairs are carrying tales between friends and acquaintances create a great deal of mischief are best contented when they can spread scandal. It seems more natural for them to speak ill of a person than to utter words of praise, and their habit of gossiping becomes so fixed that they can talk scandal almost unconsciously. It is just as easy to say good words for friends and acquaintances, even if not wholly deserved, as it is to speak ill of them, and the effect on the community is always beneficial in a general way. Scandal gathers strength as it travels by word or mouth and can never be recalled when once in circulation. Try speaking well of everyone and see what a change it will make in your own happiness as well as in the welfare of others.

Teach the Boys.

A well-known man, the monument of whose exceptional ability as a financier in the great dry goods establishment of which he is the head, contended that a discussion of the subject from his standpoint would serve no good end, since every merchant was an individual, and for every individual there would have to be a different prescription, adapted to personal temperament, mental capacity. What would be good for one might be poison for another.

He suggested that the way to make good business men, who would know how to acquire a surplus to dispose of whether or not to invest in stocks, how much money to keep on hand and how to guard against stringency in the money market, was to give more attention to the morals of the boys who were starting in business. He wished it could be shown to them how they were wasting their opportunities, how they were stultifying their manly spirit, how they are wrecking their chances for future prosperity when they indulge in games of chance, pool playing, gambling, and other vicious practices that rob them of their night's rest and fill their minds in the day time to the exclusion of the business with which they are intrusted. Successful business men, he insisted, could, in the majority of instances, take care of their finances fairly well, it is the prudence of the young business men that needs to be cultivated with greater care.

Whoever keeps company with a wolf will soon learn to howl.

NO MORE DISTRESS FROM THE STOMACH

No Dyspepsia, Gas, Heartburn or Indigestion Five Minutes Later

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of Indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a distressed, out-of-order stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of Indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin, and take a little just as soon as you can. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach. Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odours.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for out-of-order stomachs, because it prevents fermentation and takes hold of your food and digests it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Relief in five minutes from all stomach misery at any drug store, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure almost any chronic case of Dyspepsia, Indigestion or any other Stomach trouble.

PETERBOROUGH SATURDAY MARCH 11 1911

MILLBROOK VISITED EARLY THIS MORNING BY SECOND DISASTROUS FIRE--HEAVY LOSS

Blaze Broke Out in Block on Main Street at 3 O'clock and Four Stores Were Gutted Before the Fire Was Extinguished.

DAMAGE ABOUT $15,000

A disastrous conflagration broke out in Millbrook about 3 o'clock this morning, and before the fire was gotten under control, about fifteen or twenty thousand dollars' worth of property and merchandise had been consumed. The fire was first discovered in Walsh and Clark's dry goods store, by Dr. Fisher, and the alarm was immediately sent in. The firemen quickly responded and soon had two streams of water playing on the fire. By this time the flames had spread to Lang's harness establishment, thence to Steele's jewellery store, where it was finally checked, only to break out again about an hour later in R. J. Doake's office, which is located over Harold Mattrass' barber shop. This building was considered to be fireproof, but the brick wall was heated to such an intense degree as to cause the fire to burst out in the third storey. It was subsequently checked, but the building was badly damaged by fire and water.

During the course of the second outburst the intake pipe of the engine became blocked, and things began to assume a threatening aspect, but finally the obstruction was removed, and the engine again began to respond to the herculean efforts of the firemen to get it working.

The second outburst did not prove to be quite so serious as the first; but a considerable amount of damage was done before it was finally extinguished.

During the first outbreak word came to Peterborough for assistance, but Chief Howard could not despatch any help until he received the consent of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, and also assurance from the proper authorities in Millbrook that all expenses incurred by the trip would be paid by the Corporation of that town. However, word was received later, saying that the fire was under control.

Just what the damage will be could not be ascertained up to a late hour. Those who suffered the worst were Walsh & Clark, dry goods merchants; Thos. Lang, harness shop; John Steele's jewellery shop, and Harold Nattrass. A considerable amount of damage was also done to the surrounding buildings, by water and smoke. A number of plate glass windows were cracked by the heat, across the other side of the street. It is reported that the insurance on the buildings and contents, which were consumed, will not exceed ten thousand dollars.

This is the second disastrous fire to visit Millbrook within a month. The last one consumed the Needler Mill property, entailing a loss of $20,000.

ANOTHER TROOP OF SCOUTS

The second Peterborough troop of Baden-Powell Boy Scouts held their first meeting in the drill hall last night.

Over thirty boys turned out. These were divided into patrols and taken charge of by Patrol Leaders Matthews, Quinn, Read and Clements.

Owing to the fact that this was the first meeting of the second troop, no scout master was in charge, but Mr. Waterman, of the 57th regiment, was present, and after addressing a few words of advice to the Scouts he promised to be on hand next Friday and begin his duties as scout master of the new troop.

Arrangements are being made to procure scout badges for the members of the second troop and it is expected that by the first of April each scout will be wearing the tenderfoot badge.

As soon as the organization of the troop is permanently arranged, the Scouts will be given special instruction in first aid and signalling, by men who are thoroughly qualified to teach these important branches of scout training. Lectures from prominent men of the city, who are interested in the scout movement will also be forthcoming.

FAMOUS CAMMORA TRIAL WAS COMMENCED TO-DAY

Thousands Present To Watch the Proceedings---Prisoner Charged With Scores of Murders Not Only in Italy But in the United States and England.

Special to The Examiner:

VITERBO, ITALY, MARCH 11.—Nearly a riot developed when the Cammorist prisoners were paraded from the dungeons to trial to-day Thousands are present to see what they think will be the end of this deadly, best organized, criminal pact of modern times. The actual trial began to-day in the huge courtroom. It is thought the prisoners haven't the slightest chance of escape. Scores of murders and other crimes are charged against them, including killings in England and the United States, though they are being tried at present on Italian charges.

BRIDGENORTH BRETHREN WERE ENTERTAINED

Court Peterborough, No. 29, entertained Court Bridgenorth at the C.O.F. rooms last evening. The meeting was partially for the purpose of initiating six new members. These members were initiated by the district organizer, Mr. R. R. Garrior. Music for the degree work was supplied by Mr. Butcher, while Mr. Harry Edmondson delighted the boys with a few selections on the concertina. At the close of the business part of the meeting, refreshments were served, during the partaking of which several speeches were delivered, by the visiting brethren, thanking Court Peterborough for the hospitable way they had treated them.

District Organizer Garrin made a speech, in which he showed the necessity of introducing new blood into the society for the purpose of keeping it up to a high standard of efficiency. Last year the C. O. F. had a total of 77,000 members, and there were 14,000 applications received.

HON. CHAS. MURPHY TO SPEAK AT ENNISMORE

ENNISMORE, MARCH 8.—St. Patrick's Day will be celebrated in Ennismore, as usual, but instead of a concert the people will have the pleasure of hearing the Hon. Chas. Murphy, Secretary of State for Canada, lecture on "His Recent Trip Through Ireland." As Hone Mr. Murphy is one of the ablest men in the Dominion Cabinet, and probably Canada's most eloquent and forcible speaker, a great treat is in store for the people of Ennismore and the surrounding country. A large number of the citizens of Peterborough have already arranged to be present, and among others Hon. J. R. Stratton and Mr. Dan O'Connell, both of whom will also address the audience.

In addition to the speeches, a first class musical programme will be presented by local talent. All who are anxious to hear a good speech, a real literary and historical treat, should try to be in Ennismore for the evening of next St. Patrick's Day.

Besides the hall, the large stage will be provided with seats, so that as far as possible, all will be able to enjoy the lecture.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

In the course of his address at the meeting of the Public Library Association, Dr. Locke laid emphasis on the fact that one of the most valuable assets of a library lay in its stores of bound magazines. He stated that in Toronto he found the demand for this class of literature was exceptionally great and that it was in the higest degree advisable to preserve all the better magazines for circulating purposes. In the Peterborough Library there are at the present time about 340 volumes of this class of literature, and experience goes to show that there is hardly any demand for it. Peterborough readers devour with avidity all the magazines as they appear fresh from the press, but they seem to have a rooted objection to dipping into volumes that are a year or two old. Now, there is one thing that is abundantly and pleasantly true and that is that local patrons of the library have really a very high conception of what is good and wholesome in literature. Although fiction, here, as elsewhere, commends itself to nine-tenths of our readers, it is already a proven fact that there are very few indeed who do not prefer a good, sensible volume to an unwholesome one. If they will take a hint, however, and try as a change of mental pabulum a volume or two of the bound magazines, it is safe to say that they will find it agreeable and restful to their souls. It is very easily forgotten that many a book which, in years gone by, proved a favourite with the public, first saw the light in the pages of a monthly magazine and the writer in his own experience has often come across stories long out of print and which he had despaired of ever seeing again, in the pages of old volumes of magazines. There are many beautiful little poems also, stored away in these often despised receptacles, which tend to gladden the heart and bring back perhaps memories of days long gone by. We know of nothing better to take on a holiday trip than a volume of the type of literature referred to.

That the library is becoming a favourite with our citizens is being demonstrated every day. At the time of writing there are no less than 861 members on the library books, and the record of books taken out in 21 days amounts to over 2,000. The books are being taken most excellent care of, which is another proof that each individual feels the obligation resting upon him to conserve the property committed to his charge for the good of the community as a whole.

THE ICE GAVE WAY AND TWO MEN LOSE THEIR LIVES IN CREDIT RIVER

Henry A. Brown, a Mill Owner, and Kenneth South, a Young Farmer, are Drowned Near Toronto.

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, MARCH 11.—Henry A. Brown, aged 49, a mill owner and married, and Kenneth South, aged 20, a farmer's son, were drowned last night at Meadowvale Mill, on the Credit River, north west of here, while they were trying to free a dam of ice, which gave way, precipitating them into the river. The tragedy was discovered when their horse strolled back to its barn in the evening alone. The bodies have not been recovered.

A TUBERCULOSIS CONFERENCE

A meeting of those interested in the fight against tuberculosis — called, otherwise, with awful aptness, "the White Plague" — will be held in the Council Chamber on Monday night. The necessity for popular organization to combat this terrible disease, is all the more important on account of the apathy of the provincial authorities. Premier Whitney, in his accustomed autocratic mood, pooh-poohs the seriousness of the tuberculosis evil. This is in striking contrast to the action of the Quebec Government. On page eight of this issue will be found the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis of that province, detailing the steps necessary to be taken, immediately, in order to stamp out the disease. These recommendations should be of great assistance to the meeting of Monday night, for they represent the matured conclusions of a commission, after having made exhaustive investigation. Considering the fearful ravages of tuberculosis, considering the thousands of homes upon which it casts its lingering and, ultimately, deadly blight, every true friend of humanity should be interested in the work of divising means to reduce the rate and scope of the ravages of tuberculosis.

A SPLENDID CONCERT GIVEN AT ENNISMORE

On Tuesday of the past week St. Martin's T.A.S. hall, Ennismore, was the scene of a most enjoyable literary and musical entertainment when a number of well known vocalists of Peterborough visited Ennismore and gave an excellent concert, during which the pastor, Rev. Father Fitzpatrick delievered an interesting address on the subject of "How a Young Man Can Achieve Material Success."

He began by stating his great desire to see all the young men of the parish do well, increase their worldly possessions and get settled down in life. He reminded them that in order to do this they must cultivate habits of industry, perseverance and thrift to give close attention to all the details of their work as farmers and they would be certain to be successful. As examples of the benefits of the habit of stick-to-it-iveness he sketched briefly the career of such men as Leland Stanford, Sir Thomas Lipton, the Grace brothers of New York, Burke, Cochrane and others as men who had started life empty-handed and had risen to affluence and fame in a few years. But while encouraging his hearers to improve, their conditions of material prosperity, the speaker also laid stress on the necessity of being pious and God fearing men because after all wealth is as mere dross when compared with the gold of good character. Throughout the address the speaker introduced many witty and humorous remarks, which together with his pleasing personality gave to the whole discourse a most brilliant effect which kept the large audience interested from start to finish.

Although the main feature of the evening was the lecture, still the musical programme found a host of enthusiastic admirers. The gypsies' chorus, a quartette given by Messrs. Lee, Cairns, Douglas and Now drew forth rounds of applause. Mr. Douglas' sympathetic rendering or "The Bridge" was also highly appreciated. "The moon hath raised her lamp on high" by Messrs. Lee and New was much appreciated. "Sweet and Low" sung by the quartette was eagerly listened to. Mr. Thompson's comical interludes evoked screams of laughter, while his more serious number "What is a Lady?" was listened to with rapt attention. Mr. Vincent McCoke in his classical violin solo showed his thorough mastery of technique, especially in the artistic and skilful way in which he rendered the most difficult fugue passages. Thus the evening passed along pleasantly and profitably until it closed with a few remarks by Mr. Boht. Begley in his usual witty and lively manner, followed by the singing of the national anthem.

PUBLIC MUST PAY TOLL FOR WEIGHING COAL

The Property committee met last night, with the following members present: Mayor Morrow, Ald. Brown and Ald. Duncan, chairman.

It was moved by Mayor Morrow, seconded by Ald. Brown that tenders be advertised for the purchasing of market tolls.

It was decided that the city scales at the market be open to the public for weighing coal, but that they pay a toll. The city will pay for all coal that Chief Thompson gets weighed.

Moved by Mayor Morrow, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the undertakers be communicated with, in regard to tenders for the Dan Spence ambulance for this year.

CHANCE TO GET FINE PIANO AT LOW COST

The Carroll Piano Club offer on another page, is an innovation in Peterborough. The Club idea, by which members get a special buying advantage has proved very popular in other cities, and has been a great stimulus to the adding of high-class Pianos to the home. By providing a feasible plan for the purchase, it places the Queen of all instruments within much easier reach of the public than ever before. Mr. Carroll, who is conducting the present club sale, is a practical piano man, and represents a firm known throughout the Dominion for its progressiveness.

Mr. R. S. Gourlay, the President of the Company, was lately elected President of the Toronto Board of Trade, an evidence of the high esteem in which he is held in his home city.

The offer in to-day's big advertisement, covers a splendid guarantee as to quality, and durability, and contains several new and striking features. Free Insurance, and an agreement to replace an instrument if destroyed by fire before the term of payment has expired, is not the least of the inducements held out to club members. Read the ad., and then investigate further at 372 Water street.

Brock Street Rink Closed For Season

As far as ice skating is concerned the Brock street rink was closed for the season last night and to-day a staff of men is engaged in removing the ice, in order that the floor may be gotten into shape for roller skating. There has been exactly three months of skating, the ice being ready for use first on the 10th of December, and the last skating taking place on the 10th of March. The season has been considerably longer than last year, there being ice two weeks earlier. The weather has been good all along for ice making and very few of the hockey matches have had to be played on anything but the best of ice.

A CENSUS FORECAST:

The Census of Canada will be taken this summer, and Mr. Archibald Blue, Census Commissioner, estimates that the decennial census of 1911 will show an increase in the population of the country over that of the last preceding official census in 1891, of at least fifty per cent. The population in 1901, was shown by the census of that year to be 5,371,315. An increase of fifty per cent., as forecast by Mr. Blue, will bring the population, at the next census, up to about eight millions—8,056,972. The census story of Canada may at this time be interesting. The population of Canada, by the first census, in 1665, was 3,251; in 1763, it was 70,000; in 1871, it was 3,485,761; in 1881, it was 4,324,810; in 1891, it was 4,833,239; in 1901 the last census—it was 5,371,315, and if the Blue lookout is realized—fifty per cent. increase—the population at the next census will total 8,056,972. Naturally, population begets population, as money makes money. In the twenty years—1871-1891 — the population of Canada increased by 1,349,468, or at the rate of 67,473 per year. In the twenty years—1891-1911—the increase was 3,223,733, or at the rate of 161,186 per year. In the first twenty-year period the Conservatives were in power, and in the second period, the Liberals managed our affairs. That is, practically, in both cases—the first five years of the first twenty-year period were practically under Liberal rule, and during the first five years of the second period the Conservatives were in power. In regard to relative racial increase of population it may be pointed out that in 1901 there were in Canada 1,649,371 persons of French descent; in Quebec 1,322,115; in Ontario 158,261, and in the West, 20,621. It has been shown that in the last 200 years—since 1711 the French Canadian population has been doubling every 27 years. If the total population of Canada had increased in the same ratio from 1871, when it was 3,485,761, till 1912, the population of Canada would be nearly 12,000,000. The more rapid increase of the French element of our population is due simply to the fact that large families are the rule among our French Canadian compatriots while among the Anglo-Saxon element of our population the reverse is the case. Some wordy elements among our Anglo Saxon element, who assume to see the danger of "French domination" might reflect a little upon the incompatibility of, what is called, race suicide and high census figures.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Reciprocity, come to think of it, does mean annexation of Yankee money by Canadian farmers.

Conservatives now hold F. W. Haultain, the Conservative leader, who favours reciprocity, to be as great a traitor as Mr. Sifton is a hero.

The shameful language applied at the Massey Hall meeting, to respected and honoured public men by Mr. George Tate Blackstock, suggests that a change in the last syllable of his surname would not be a piece of misnomer.

Reading a report of the hysterical speeches of Sir James Whitney and the Massey Hall orators on reciprocity, one is reminded of the fustian, flapdoodle, bombast and buncombe of fourth of July orators by the village constable in the United States.

Massey Hall, Toronto, doesn't seem to be a very fitting place to hold a meeting in to denounce a measure intended to benefit the farmers. The farmers built Massey Hall out of the profits of one of the industries, one of the special interests, which were the backbone of the meeting.

Sir James Whitney would be better employed in holding down the Liberal policy of prohibition of export of pulpwood in an unmanufactured state, than in slangwhanging President Taft and Champ Clark and setting up an annexation man of straw for the glory of knocking him down with big chunks of dictionary.

At the great anti-reciprocity meeting in Massey Hall, Toronto, there were speeches less remarkable than the speakers. Who were the gentlemen who chiefly voiced the sentiments of a meeting drawn from a city that would oppose the adoption of the ten commandments, if proposed by a Liberal Government? Sir Mortimer Clark, Chairman, a lawyer; Mr. J. Z. Lash, a lawyer; Mr. Geo. Blackstock, a lawyer. They stood for their clients, the special interests, talked to their briefs, and no doubt earned their fees. The Massey Hall protest meeting was not only thus useless, as an argument against reciprocity, but useless because only one side was heard. Mr. Lash, the manager of the "blow-out" refused to allow the other side to be heard.

MR. HAULTAIN ANSWERS MR. BLACKSTOCK.

(The Globe of March 10)

At the moment last night when, before a great audience of Toronto citizens opposed to reciprocity in natural products, Mr. George Tate Blackstock—displaying the venom of a lifetime of animosity against Liberalism—was denouncing Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fielding as co-conspirators, bent upon the destruction of Canadian nationality, the wires were bearing to Toronto a very different message from the great West. There, in the capital of the chief wheat-growing Province of the country, (Saskatchewan), the Legislature unanimously endorsed the reciprocity agreement as a wise and statesmanlike measure for the development of the Dominion.

Mr. Haultain, the leader of the Conservative party in Saskatchewan, in the course of his speech in favour of the endorsation of the agreement, furnished a most fitting reply to the fire-brand utterances of Mr. Blackstock. "We, out here," he said, "are just as able as the magnates in the East to decide what is patriotic and what is unpatriotic. I am not prepared to sit at the feet of any of these Gamaliels and study loyalty."

"It is gratifying to be able to place these words of Mr. Haultain over against the political incendiarism of Mr. Blackstock. That gentleman was addressing an audience composed in a large measure of British-born Canadians. With the inelegant preface that it was hard to teach an old dog new tricks, he declared that Sir Wilfrid had all his life striven against the Imperial tie, and that in proposing reciprocity in natural products he was giving another example of that tendency. With a disingenuousness worthy of a Police Court pettifogger instead of a leader of the Bar, Mr Blackstock covered up and hid away from his audience—many of whom do not know the outstanding facts of Canadian history—the story of the adoption of the policy of British preference at the instance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party. Not once during the course of his speech did he admit that the men who propose better trade relations with the United States declare in the same breath that the British preference is to be maintained as the very foundation-stone of the Liberal fiscal policy.

It is by such trickery and evasion that a verdict is sought from the people of this city. It is by denouncing the majority of the citizens of this country as conspirators against its continued national existence that Mr. Blackstock hopes to restore the obliterate ascendancy of Toryism. He will fail, as he and his associates have failed during the past fifteen years. He is of the Bourbon order, and cannot see what Mr. Haultain so clearly perceives, that increasing trade relations with the United States have not led to a desire for closer political relationship, but that the desire to remain a part of the British Empire has grown stronger year by year, despite an ever-increasing volume of trade between the Republic and the Dominion.

We wish the "eighteen" joy of their ally. It must have been with great gratification indeed that Sir Mortimer Clark heard the statesman who paid him the high and deserved honour of recommending his name for the Lieutenant-Governorship of Ontario described as a conspirator against the very existence of the country to the service of which he has given the love and devotion of a lifetime. No doubt Mr. Blackstock will be featured as the chief attraction at other meetings organized by the "eighteen."

QUEBEC LEADS THE WAY IN PREVENTION OF TUBERCULOSIS

Sweeping and Valuable Recommendations From the Quebec Royal Commission—Creation of a Special Department of Government Suggested

The report of the Quebec Royal Commission on Tuberculosis, gives very explicit and definite recommendations to the Government concerning the most practical and efficacious measures to adopt to combat and stamp out the white plague.

Certain measures may be put into execution immediately, and certain others require time and perseverence.

The measures to be taken immediatel yare as follows:

1. More rigorous application of laws contained in the statutes regarding tuberculosis.
2. Elementary instruction on hygiene in the primary schools, normal schools and other houses of education.
3. Popular instruction under the direction of the board of health.
4. Medical inspection of schools, shops and factories.
5. The establishment and maintenance of anti-tuberculosis dispensaries in the principal centres of the province.
6. Isolation of advanced cases among the poor.
7. Establishment of open-air schools for weak children who are prone to tuberculosis.
8. Treatment of curable cases by the "class" method, as it has been demonstrated that this is a method of treatment almost equal in results to sanitoriums and much more economical, giving to the patients, besides the opportunity of living with ther family. This kind of treatment is acceptable to the poor people, and the sanitorium method to people of a richer class.
9. Legislation to prohibit the premature employment of children.
10. Investigation and legislation regarding the hours of labour of adults in factories.
11. Legislation against alcoholism.
12. Meat inspection and the control of the sale of milk.

The measures for gradual execution:

1. The establishment of preventoriums.
2. The erection of sanitoriums.
3. Agricultural and vacation schools.
4. Improved condition of dwelling houses, and legislation to insist upon the construction of sanitary dwellings at reasonable rents for the working classes.
5. Legislation for improved hygienic conditions in the cities and districts of the province.

In conclusion the Commission makes the following recommendation to the Provincial Government:

That the Provincial Board of Health shall be the central authority for the direction and application of measures in the fight against tuberculosis, and for this end a money appropriation should be voted sufficient to create a special tuberculosis department with the necessary working staff. This department should be directed by a competent medical man, who will carry out all the educational means mentioned in the report, inspect the anti-tuberculosis institutes, and try to organize others to complete the anti-tuberculosis armament; compile statistics, and present an annual report on his administration and the results of the anti-tuberculosis campaign.

That in each municipality or association of municipalities where there is an anti-tuberculosis society, established by charter, the Government, on the favourable report of the Provincial Board of Health, shall contribute a certain fixed sum to the cost and upkeep of any dispensary, and give power to the municipalities served by this dispensary to contribute equally to its construction and upkeep.

ARTISAN CLASS NOT AFFECTED BY RECIPROCITY AGREEMENT

(Globe.)

The assertion that under the reciprocity agreement the artisans of Canada will be left defenceless against the competition of United States manufacturers, and that as a result there will be a decrease of industrial activity in the Dominion, is the most unfounded of the many objections advanced against the agreement. On several occasions it has been pointed out in these columns that the Executive of the Manufacturers' Association in its pronouncement against reciprocity admitted that it took an adverse view not because any manufacturing interest was seriously affected, but on the broader ground of national development on east and west lines. Had any established industry in this country been seriously hurt by the proposed tariff changes we may be quite sure the fact would not have gone unrecorded by the Manufacturers' Association.

The vague cry of injury to Canadian industry is being used with some effect in the cities and towns, and Liberals should take every opportunity to challenge such statements demand particulars as to the specific industry said to be adversely affected, and emphasize the fact that the reductions in the tariff are almost entirely upon natural products and chiefly relate to food stuffs.

The following figures as to present and proposed duties indicate the chief manufactured articles on which the Canadian duties and those of the United States are to be changed:

	Present duty	Proposed duty
Brass in bars, rods, or plates	10 p.c.	Free
Rolled iron or steel sheets, or plates, No. 14 gauge or thinner	5 p.c.	Free
Galvanized iron or steel sheets or plates, No. 14 gauge or thinner	5 p.c.	Free
Typesetting and casting machines	20 p.c.	Free
Biscuits when sweetened	27½ p.c.	25 p.c.
Biscuits, combined with chocolate, nuts, fruits, etc.	35 p.c.	32½ p.c.
Confectionery	35 p.c.	32½ p.c.
Pickles	35 p.c.	32½ p.c.
Farm wagons	25 p.c.	22½ p.c.
Plows	20 p.c.	15 p.c.
Harrows, drills, horse rakes, cultivators, thrashers	20 p.c.	15 p.c.
Hay loaders, potato diggers, manure spreaders, feed and grain crushers and cutters, fanning mills, etc.	25 p.c.	20 p.c.
Windmills	25 p.c.	20 p.c.
Building stone	15 p.c.	12½ p.c.
Roofing slate	75c sq.	56c sq.
Asbestos fabrics	25 p.c.	22½ p.c.
Printing ink	20 p.c.	17½ p.c.
Cutlery	30 p.c.	27½ p.c.
Bath tubs and bath room fixtures, laundry tubs and sinks	35 p.c.	32½ p.c.
Clocks and watches	35 p.c.	32½ p.c.
Band instruments	25 p.c.	22½ p.c.
Canoes and smallboats	25 p.c.	22½ p.c.
Automobiles and other motor vehicles	35 p.c.	30 p.c.
Musical instrument cases and portfolios, etc., of leather	35 p.c.	30 p.c.

These are practically the only items affecting Canadian manufacturers in the agreement. Does anyone suppose that reductions of 2 1-2 and 5 per cent. on what are in most cases fairly high duties will lessen by a single workman the force employed by the implement makers, the motor car builders, or the other manufacturers affected? The cry that Canadian manufacturers and their workmen are to be subjected to undue competition from the United States as a result of the lowering of duties is without foundation in fact, and is being taken up as a substitute for the annexation bogey, which has ceased to frighten. The Government of Canada has not gone into the reciprocity negotiations lightly or without knowledge of conditions. Mr. Fielding by the British preferential tariff and similar measures made many manufacturers prosperous in spite of their own protests that the preference would bring ruin upon them. The proposed readjustment of the tariff will have the same result. In a year from now the men who are raising their voices in protest will be ready to admit that their forebodings have not been justified.

ELLIOT'S

WILL ADD $200 A YEAR TO YORK COUNTY FARMERS

Ex-Warden Baker Enthusiastic Over Reciprocity Measure—May, the Veteran J. P., and W. R. Armstrong, a Conservative Farmer, Approve—Best Thing Ever Proposed, Says A. E. Widdifield

(Toronto Star)

NEWMARKET, MARCH 10.—Out on the 5th concession of Whitchurch township, on Lot 32, near the village of Pine Orchard, Wednesday, they held a farm sale. All day long the yeomen of North York were gathered there to the number of a couple of hundred or more. For miles around men came to see the auctioneer sell off the cattle and horses on the old Blackstock farm.

The farmers clustered together in groups in the farm yard, seemed to agree that times are good, and are likely to be a sight better before they are worse.

If this treaty goes through," said Mr. Seneca Baker, ex-Warden of York County, who drove over to the sale from Bloomington, "do you know what difference it will make to the farmers of this particular district? Well, in a rough way I've been figuring it out, and I calculate that every farm of 100 acres will be able to average $200 more per year.

"Now, see—this is a mixed farming and dairy country. We used to sell barley before the McKinley tariff, at prices running from 60c as high as $1.25. Then we were shut out of the United States market, and prices dropped to 50 or 55 cents a bushel. If you remove the restriction now we'll save the duty, and get, say, 75c a bushel. A farmer with 100 acres generally sows 10 acres in barley. That means we will have an average of 400 bushels to sell at 75c, instead of 50c. So count $100 extra on barley.

Easily Averages $200 More.

Similarly with wheat, oats, and peas. You can easily count up more than $200 if you take the full difference made by the duty into account, but allow for a-levelling up, and you can say the farmers of this part of the country will average $200 more for their crops with reciprocity—without counting butter, eggs, milk, cattle, hogs, or horses, at all."

Feed it to Hogs Now.

More than one of the veteran county yeomen recalled the days when Ontario farmers could sell their barley. Barley has been a feed grain simply since the McKinley Bill—practically speaking. Our brewers use some of it, but the demand is limited. Ontario farmers feed it to the hogs like American farmers feed corn And corn makes much the better feed.

"As soon as I saw there was a chance of this deal I quit feeding barley and started buying American corn," said Mr. Lazenby of Whitchurch. I pay 58c. for the corn and I am offered 70c a bushel for barley over here in Stouffville. It was only 50c a bushel last year. I am feeding 55 pigs and American corn is just as good as Canadian. You can get all you want. Buyers take corn-fed pork just as quick as pea-fed, too."

"It's all pea-fed once it gets to Toronto," laughed a bystander.

"Pea-fed superiority is all nonsense anyway," said Mr. Lazenby. "Expert buyers make no distinction around this part of the country. It's a name, that's all, and not one in a hundred knows pea-fed pork from corn-fed when they see them together."

Was up to $1.50 Once

"I remember the year of the big barley market in 1880," said Mr. Cooney, "when the price went to $1.50.

"This country here grows mighty good barley, too. Do you fellows remember 'Little Bradstreet,' the barley buyer for the Yankees—how he used to slip in ahead of the other fellows with a last cent more? Wheat that year sold at $1.27."

Barley is a fine rotation crop," said A. B Haines, ex-reeve of Whitchurch. "I've cleaned up many a field with barley. It's a nice easy grain to handle. The crop comes off early—a little way out of the run of the other harvest. When you get the barley off you can cultivate the field just in good time to kill off the fall weed seeds. That's one way I've cleaned many a dirty field—raising clover and barley."

Many J. P.'s Favour it.

One of the staunchest upholders of the principle of trade taking natural courses is Mr. Nelson May, justice of the peace at Pine Orchard.

Mr. May remembers the pioneer days of his township. His family were U. E. Loyalists from Philadelphia, and in Mr. May's own time the deer and the wolves still lingered in the woods near Pine Orchard. He is a builder by trade and contracts for carpenter work. His business takes him among the farmers all the time, and he is in the closest possible touch with their problems and opinions.

"The farmer is to have his innings now," said Mr. May. "He has been doing better for the last few years, but he has not yet attained the grand position of wealthy independence some people seem to think. A hired man cost $25 and $30 a month last season—and board. The average farm in King and Whitchurch runs at 100 acres. It takes a hard working farmer with a hired man by the year and another man for six or eight months for haying, seeding, and harvesting, to handle 100 acres of this heavy land.

"The wages of these men are the biggest item in a farmer's expenses, so you see little things make a big difference. I think the farmer's interests should come first, and the country will prosper as he prospers. I'll back the farmer every time, and if he wants reciprocity, I say he should get it.

"As for fruit, I think American early fruit and our fruit coming on later will just balance each other. Let natural products work back and forth that way, according to the season and the climate."

A Conservative in Line.

One of the successful farmers of North York, Mr. W. R. Armstrong, has always ranked as a Conservative. He lives a mile out of Newmarket and with many others from that direction attended the farm sale at Pine Orchard. Mr. Armstrong also enters into lumber operations of considerable extent, and may be looked upon as more than ordinarily "solid" in the business sense. His political affiliations have not bound him in his attitude towards the momentous question of a mutual interchange of natural products with our neighbours to the south.

"I remember the two hardest cracks Canada ever got," said he. "The time that Canada was driven out of the American market after the civil war, and the time the McKinley bill came into force. The barley trade was killed, and horses were slaughtered in the Toronto market.

"Now, I'm a Tory. I'm not talking free trade. I'm talking reciprocity in natural products. I believe times are good for our farmers now, but I think they'll be better still if this new deal goes through."

Best Thing Ever Proposed.

A. E. Widdifield stopped criticizing a horse which Mr. Silverside, the auctioneer, was lauding to the skies, to make a few remarks at this juncture. Mr. Widdifield is the Division Court bailiff, and an ex-alderman of Newmarket, where he conducts a lively livery business.

"This treaty is the best thing that was ever proposed," he declared. "The best times we ever had in the country were before the McKinley bill. They're good again now. Let's make them better. I can't see any possible injury. This is a farming country. What's good for them is good for the whole of Canada.

"The talk about raising the cost of living reminds me that I bought a goose for $1.87 the other day. I thought the price high, and I remembered when I could have bought that same goose for 50 cents, or one just as good. But at the time I could buy geese at 50 cents each, I could have hit a dozen men with one snowball looking for work at 75 cents a day, and unable to get it. That was back in 1891-4, right in Newmarket."

Like a Free Dinner.

Mr. David Clark of Lemonville, offered an apt illustration of the attitude of those who cannot find it in their hearts to accept "a market of a hundred million people at our very doors."

"Here at noon to-day," said he, "they had a grand spread for those who attended the auction sale this morning. Well, if Canada don't accept this offer of reciprocity, she'll be just the same as us, if we had all refused to sit in at the dinner table spread for us by the generosity of Mr. Sin this afternoon."

A BILIOUS HEADACHE

Bile in the blood is poison and causes pain. Mrs. Thomas Covert, Highland Grove, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered with biliousness, stomach trouble and terrible headaches. Having used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills will say unhesitatingly that this is the most effective treatment obtainable for these troubles."

"THE MAN OF THE HOUR"

With Felix Haney

"The Man of the Hour" by George Broadhurst, which has been written about so much during the last three years, will play an engagement in Peterborough, Thursday night, March 16th, at the Grand Opera House. In this great play, the principal element of success is the heartiness with which it is presented by the excellent company; laughter is never forced, and it is never courted by an approach to vulgarity. The company seem to enter completely into the fun of the thing, and to enjoy it as much as the audience. Their spirit is unflagging, and their perception of the possibilities of every position complete. If it be true that a good hearty laugh saves a doctor's bill, "The Man of the Hour" will enable every playgoer to add a long list of credits to his medicine account. The prolonged success of the piece is due to the fact that it is so happily constructed that it can be seen again and again without a moment of weariness. The Company which Manager Wm. A. Brady is sending here is a special one and is made up of well known players, including Felix Haney, who has made the character of Alderman Phelan famous, J. O. LeBrasse, as Boss Horrigan, Elliott Simms, R. J. Rollo, Gertrude Fowler, Anabe Neilson, Bertha Holly and others. Seat sale opens Tuesday.

HARMONY IN THE HOME

He is Happy Who Finds Peace in His Own Home

BY ROY GILRAY

One of the most helpful adjuncts to a man's largest means of success is a restful home-life.

What a happy man was Edmund Burke when he could say of his home, "Every care vanishes the moment I enter under my own roof!"

Home is a residence, not merely of the body, but of the heart. It is a place for affections to unfold and develop, for children to love and learn, and play in, for husband and wife to toil smilingly together, and make life a mutual blessing. The object of all ambition should be to create a happy home. If we are not happy there we cannot be happy elsewhere. It is the best proof o fthe virtues of a family to see a happy fireside.

Before the formation of that most sublime of earthly institutions, "Home, Sweet Home," how smoothly everything went along; how considerate each was for the comfort of the other; how sympathetic, how attentive, how self-sacrificing! Nothing was considered too expensive. Those delicious chocolates, how they used to be so daintily presented each Friday night! But now, where are they? Where are those little attentions? Where are the little comforts that were so profusely scattered during courtship? Here is where we make the greatest mistake of our lives. Married life should see the fullest development of those tender relations so beautifully started before wedlock; should increase the ardor and devotion of one for the other, rather than quench for ever that spark of divine love.

During the period of courtship how eagerly the blushing "fair one" longed for the appearance of her "beau-ideal" very much after the manner of the young lady who said:

"He kissed me—and I know 'twas wrong,
For he was neither kith nor kin.
Need one do penance very long
For such a tiny little sin?

"He pressed my hand—that wasn't right!
Why will men have such wicked ways?
It wasn't for a minute quite,
But in it there were days and days!

"But, after all, I'm not to blame;
He took the kiss! I do think men
Are quite without the sense of shame!
I wonder when he'll come again?"

After marriage some men are fortunate if they receive any welcome at all.

As soon as the "honey-phase" of the moon has passed, and life settles down to the usual series of monotonous household duties, it is then that the wife should be careful that when her husband comes home "Peace" shall be written on the doorpost. Many a man is often only a night-lodger in his own house, pleading that the necessities of business require him to leave early and return late. You may be sure his home lacked the emblem of peace.

If a wife cannot make her home bright and happy, so that it shall be the cleanest, sweetest, most cheerful place her husband can find refuge in—a retreat from the toils and troubles of the outer world—then God help the poor man, for he is virtually homeless.

She should seek to make home attractive; should cater to the "softer side" of his human nature. There is a good deal of domestic happiness in a well dressed mutton chop or a tidy beefsteak for breakfast. The woman who can cook well contributes more to the happiness of society than twenty who cannot.

Much friction comes of the inability of the average woman to comprehend that her husband has many thoughts, moods, and feelings, in which she has absolutely no part. If wives could realize this, and accept the fact, how many unhappy moments would be spared them. A husband may at times be silent and preoccupied, and yet it does not argue that he is indifferent to, or tired of, his wife. He may be depressed, and yet not feel that marriage for him is a failure. He may be captious and fretful, and yet feel no irritation against his wife.

It is a well known fact that a smile begets a smile; then smile on him for a change, and note the result.

While some women do not always use the best judgment in dealing with their "hubbies," they are not always to blame. Many men become so cold and caustic after the ceremony at the altar that the spark of love, so gently kindled before, is hopelessly smothered, and the wife and mother is left to pine away her days for the want of that affection that is so vital to her existence.

On the other hand, the dutiful husband should seek the development of that divine attribute in woman, and enjoy the warm rays of inspiration that flow from the life of one who is loved. Who has not felt the power of woman's love?

Woman's love is stronger than death; it rises superior to adversity; it towers in sublime beauty above the niggardly selfishness of the world. Misfortune cannot suppress it; enmity cannot alienate it; temptation cannot enslave it. It is the guardian angel of the nursery and the sick-bed; it gives an affectionate concord to the partnership of life; circumstances cannot modify it; it ever remains the same to sweeten existence, to purify the cup of life on the rugged pathway to the grave, and melt to moral pliability the brittle nature of man. It is the ministering spirit of home, hovering in soothing caresses over the cradle or deathbed, and filling up the urn of all its precious memories.

A happy wedlock is a long falling in love. But the golden marriage is a part of love which the bridal-day knows nothing of. Youth is the tassel and silken flower of love; age is the full corn, ripe and solid in the ear. Beautiful is the morning of love with its crimson, violet, purple and gold, with its hopes of days to come. Beautiful, also, is the evening of love, with its glad remembrances and its rainbow side turned toward heaven as well as earth.

The model husband should strive to live up to the "Ten Commandments" of the marriage altar:

1. Never, except for the best reasons, oppose my wife's will.
2. Discharge, freely, all duties for her sake.
3. Never scold.
4. Never worry her with commands.
5. Never look cross at her.
6. Endeavor to promote her piety.
7. Share her burdens.
8. Overlook her foibles.
9. Cherish and defend her.
10. Remember her in my prayers, and thus we will be blessed.

Take two "bears" into your home, "bear" and "forbear." Do not be too exacting. Overlook your wife's weaknesses, as she closes her eyes on many of your shortcomings.

Be like the young Quaker who received the following splendid advice from his father: "When thee went courting, I told thee to keep thy eyes wide open; now that thee is married, I tell thee to keep them half-shut."

Notice kindly her efforts to promote your comfort.

Don't treat her affection with indifference, and, above all, do not think it undignified or ill-befitting to yield to her wishes.

Don't treat your wife so that she will think you do not care for her. She may mistake that habitually cold and indifferent manner that you affect. Be manly so that she can look up to you, rely upon your courage, and feel secure in putting her confidence in you.

If you can make your face to shine on strangers, why darken it on those who should be dear to you?

Is it that you have so squandered your smiles abroad that you have only frowns to carry home?

Is it that while out in the world you have been so effusive with your good temper that you have but ill humors with which to cloud your own fireside?

Is it that it requires but a mere passing guest to enter, while you are speaking daggers to those you are supposed to love, to change yur tone?

Then it is time you tore off your mask of plausibilty. Blush to carry the deception any further. Truth will out! The stranger on whom you bestow your smiles will discover, sooner or later, your real character and hate you all the more for the unpardonable duplicity.

It is the little things in life that count. Nowhere does it apply with more force than in the home.

'Tis a little thing to say, "You are kind,"
"I love you, my dear," each night;
But it sends a thrill through the heart, I find—
For love is tender, love is blind—
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress;
We take, but we do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole the love grudgingly, less and less,
Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

Most Canadians Have Catarrh

Our Changeable Climate is Responsible.

Where the atmosphere is damp, with sudden changes in temperature, almost everybody has Catarrh, in some form or other. The ordinary cold in the head inflames and weakens the membranes lining the nose and throat, and starts a discharge. The next cold is more easily caught, and soon the patient is never quite free of it.

As Catarrh develops the discharge increases—drops into the throat, especially at night—and takes on an offensive odor. Besides being exceedingly disagreeable, there is great danger of the disease extending to the lungs, stomach, or bowels.

Though it is very difficult to cure, Father Morrisey devised a combined internal and external treatment that has cured thousands. The Tablets tone up and invigorate the system, and assist Nature in throwing off the disease, while the salve, applied up the nostrils, clears out the discharge and heals the membranes. Combined treatment, 50c at your dealer's, or from Father Morrisey Medicine Co., Ltd., Montreal, Que.

PERTINENT! PARAGRAPHS

BY SIMPLE SIMON

The Isolation Hospital was ready none too soon, for at the Board of Education meeting on Wednesday last Inspector Mowat reported that there were eight cases of scarlet fever in the vicinity of the Central school. Some Boards of Health might consider this sufficient warranty for closing the school forthwith.

An Ottawa man claims that he can change copper into nickel. If he had the common-cents to turn coppers into nickels, and let us into the secret, it might help to reduce the present high cost of living.

There has been an unprecedented run on axle-wheel grease at the hardware stores during the last few days.

An advertisement appeared in the local papers this week for a school teacher at the munificent salary of $30 a month! And yet the education authorities wonder why there is such a dearth of qualified teachers in Ontario. To offer a chore-boys' wages for a teacher's services, is an outrageous insult to the teaching profession.

"Propriety" seems to be much shocked and perturbed at the exhibition of the harem skirt and refers to the garment as a "breach of decency." Perhaps the "breeches of indecorum" would be a more fitting appellation from his point of view.

At the Council meeting on Monday the Property committee was empowered to enter into a contract for a dumping ground for the city. What a pity the river is so full of the sewage—it would have been such a convenient dumping place for the rest of the city refuse.

The snow, though melting, is merciless, and a good many of us blush at the eye sores in our yards, laid bare by its disappearance.

Read the letter and the paragraph over again. "Labour"—oh, no, don't apologise.

It is testimonials such as this that have made Baby's Own Tablets popular—that have shown them to be an invaluable medicine for little ones. The Tablets always do good—they can never do harm. FOR MEN ONLY

Special Meeting Will be Held in Knox Church To-morrow

The men of Peterborough will have a free opportunity of hearing Mr. Woodside in Knox Church to-morrow afternoon, when he will speak to them on "The Labour Question and a Man's Religion." Mr. McBretney will sing. The service last evening was well attended and another effective address was given by Mr. Woodside on the subject "The Great Mother Cry of the Divine Heart," Matt. 11, 28-30. These words were the appeal of one who knows the human heart with such accuracy as cannot be challenged to men suffering from the great burdens of life. Jesus had been with men everywhere—on hillside and lake. He studied men in the synagogue and market. He knew the problems of the home and office. He saw distress of sickness and poverty; then declared himself as the answer to the world's great need. The world to-day is still broken-hearted, and needs Christ as much as ever. Three forces—the cares of life so worrying and distracting, the utter selfishness which governs life is often hidden under the garb of the "Good Fellow," the evasion of the responsibility of each man to God cause the heavy burdens of life. To all these Jesus pledges himself as the solution It is not the mountains or the sea air that is required, but the "Yoke of Christ." God's heart-reaching cry is "Come unto Me all ye who are weary and are heavy laden. God urges because He realises the heart's need. Our only safeguard is Christ.

Makes Hair Grow

McDermid and Jury have an invigorator that will grow hair or money back.

The time to take care of your hair is when you have hair to take care of.

If your hair is getting thin, gradually falling out, it cannot be long before the spot appears.

The greatest remedy to stop the hair from falling is SALVIA, the Great American Hair Grower, first discovered in England. SALVIA furnishes nourishment to the hair roots and acts so quickly that people are amazed. A large bottle for 50c.

THE FAR-VOYAGING PETERBOROUGH CANOE

The Peterborough canoe has a world wide fame. There is hardly a continent or country in the world, whose waters it does not skim. Another example of its far-voyaging qualities was seen on the pavement in front of the William English Canoe Company's buildings, Charlotte street, this morning. A solidly crated canoe was being artistically addressed to "Mr. Walker, Seaview, Isle of Wight," the beautiful south of England where, at this moment, the violets and other wild flowers are blooming in the hedgerows and the waters invite the hull of the "light canoe"—the Peterborough canoe, which left Peterborough in its three thousand mile voyage this morning.

PRESENTATION MADE TO REV. C. H. COON

Last evening to the surprise of Rev. and Mrs. Coon, the Mark Street parsonage was visited by a number of people from the Bethel appointment, seeking a means of giving an expression of their inherent kindness. They thoughtfully brought with them a delicious spread of edibles. After enjoying the good things with their host and hostess, the ladies of the company, on their own behalf and others of the neighbourhood, who could not be present, presented Mrs. Coon with a well-filled purse, accompanied by many kind words, thus tangibly expressing the esteem and affection in which their pastor's wife is held among them.

Mrs. Coon, taken completely by surprise, spoke her thankful appreciation of what she deemed an unmerited evidence of their love, and after a pleasant hour of conversation all repaired to the church to enjoy the congregational meeting there in progress.

A SPLENDID ADDRESS ON BRITISH DIPLOMACY

Mr. R. S. Neville, of Toronto, Lectures Before the Pupils of the Peterborough Normal School.

AN ELOQUENT SPEAKER

The Normalites and their friends were favoured last night, by a most eloquent, interesting and instructive address in the lecture hall of the school, by Mr. Neville, of Toronto. The subject of his address was "British Diplomacy," and he dealt with it in a most able manner. The room was well filled and the audience showed intense interest in the address.

"There has crept into the school books, some views of British Diplomacy, which create a uneasiness, and make the readers regard them as being uninteresting, but they are very much mistaken," said Mr. Neville. "I found the subject, one of intense interest. I am going to ask you to take a general view of the subject. British Diplomacy has to deal with an empire that has to deal with all the continents and all the seas of the world. Moreover, it is constantly engaged with looking after British interests and other interests, and it is pitted against other nations, but always with a view for a Government in one spot, when they have possession in every direction to consider. Let us take a little trip around the world. Away back before the historic age, we can see two sections of human life. Finally the white man did arise and by and by, when they did arise, we find some wonderful migrations — east to India—then to South Africa—to the East Indies and to the West Indies. One of the great white races settled in England. The different races—Jutes, Anglos, Saxons, Normans and Danes, all Pirates, if you like, made a central meeting place in the British Isles. Out of this has developed a nation that has been the star of the world. During the conquest up to 1066, the invaders settled in the British Isles and stayed there. They learned that the sea was the great highway for invaders. They got experience in sailing and found that this was an essential in invading a country. Thus it came that they gained control of the sea. That control extended all over the waters of the world. Look to-day. Gibraltar, the Straits of Gibraltar, the key to the east, is in the hands of the British.

It would be impossible for one nation to conquer that power, although one people could not stand against a united Europe. When any one people sought to get it into one hand although it was a threatened evil, they were prepared. The idea of universal dominion was the curse of the world, until the death of Napoleon. England was compelled to stand up for her rights and go against them. Three hundred years ago she defeated the Spanish, and finally, one hundred years later, Napoleon was overthrown, and England put the European nations back on their feet, and saw Napoleon a prisoner. In place of Universal Dominion, England restored the national liberties to the world at large and gave them a chance to work out their own ideas according to their own opinions. No nation has been powerful enough to rule and govern all mankind, and so it has come to the time that we say, 'Give them a chance.' From a hundred years ago there has been no general war. England in that hundred years has been acknowledged as the mistress of the seas."

"When Bismarck had taken all he wanted from Austria, he looked to the future Germany, and he had a great neighbour in Russia. He said to Russia, 'You go east and leave the west to me.' But England has saved the west; she had saved France from being taken. England has stood in the way in everything. England has said, "We'll build two battleships to every one of yours if necessary. If we lose command of the sea, we must die, but you do not need command of the sea to live. But we will die, or command it. British diplomacy has been carried on for the liberties of mankind for years. England has established a policy linked with the interests of other countries. Japan defeated Russia, but there was something behind it all. England said that if any nation interfered in the cause of Russia, she would interfere for Japan, for she knew that if Russia got control of the Indian ocean and the east, she would have Japan, and China would be an easy mark. All she would have to do, would be to march over and drive the British out of India. So it was that Japan made a treaty with Russia, and peace was restored, and in this manner, England saved Japan, and paid back the debt she has owed for a hundred years."

"Great Britain controls, by her fleet, every part and every entrance to Asia. Under Britain's leadership the great nations have marched arm in arm, and helped education and furthered civilization."

"Now let us cross the Atlantic," continued the speaker. "Spain discovered America, and discovery is title. Portugal discovered the east. The pope divided the treasures between the two, giving Spain the West and Portugal the East. Then England again showed her teeth. The war with Spain was not a very glorious one, but it served to open the eyes of the British. John Wesley was one man who opened the eyes of the British nation and woke them up. Next came Wm. Pitt, and with his patriotic oratory, he roused the people to the needs of their country. The two songs, "God Save the King" and "Rule Britania," have done more for Britain, than any two of her dreadnoughts.

Rule Britania, rule the waves, Britons never will be slaves, and at this the army and navy was fitted up She woke up, and drove the French out of America, and established her power in India. Now don't charge me, with my opinion, but see the effects yourself. They took all from France, everything that they wanted, but they wanted her to be a power in Europe. When in the war with France they wanted to keep friends with France, and they have made friends with France, and they have made friends with the powers of the world. This is one of the secrets of England — greatness—she wants peace with all, and peace between all."

JUST ONE WOMAN IN THOUSANDS

Who Can Say "Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Me Well!"

Mrs. Louis Delorme who was always tired and nervous and suffered from Backache, tells how she found a cure.

St. Rose du Lac, Man., March. 10.—(Special).—The story of Mrs. Louis Delorme, a well known and highly respected resident of this place, is identical with that of thousands of other women in Canada. It is all the more interesting on that account. She was tired, nervous and worn out. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her.

"I suffered for five years from Backache and too frequent urination, which destroyed my sleep," Mrs. Delorme states. "My head would ache, and I was always tired and nervous. My limbs were heavy, and I had a dragging sensation across the loins. Dodd's Kidney Pills made me well. I used in all ten boxes, but they fixed me up."

Thousands of other Canadian women who have not used Dodd's Kidney Pills are in just the condition Mrs. Delorme was in before she used them. Thousands of others who were in that condition and who used Dodd's Kidney Pills, are now well and strong.

We learn from the experiences of others, and those experiences teach us that the weary and worn women of Canada can find relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

(Copyr 1909 by Bradley-Garretson Co. Ltd.)

"Of your philosophy you make no use If you give way to accidental evils"
Julius Caesar, Act IV., Sc. 3.

Brutus was "sick of many griefs." His friend and relative Cassius uttered these words to give quiet to his mind. To "wail his woe" at such a time seemed to Cassius weakness in Brutus. "Travellers must be content," were the wise words of fool Touchstone; come rain, come shine; come sorrow, come joy, come loss, come gain,—be content is excellent philosophy; but it would require a man with almost superhuman strength of will to bear some losses uncomplainingly. Brutus' crowning loss is an example. He had just before his conversation with Cassius received word o fthe suicide of his wife Portia. He not only suffered the loss, but he blamed himself largely for it. Brooding over the conspiracy in which he had taken part and the murder of Caesar, worry about the fate of her husband had driven her mad and caused her to destroy her life. The sense of our own guilt as the cause of the seemingly accidental evils that visit us is what makes them so hard to bear.

There is much to be learned from Cassius' words. Under ordinary circumstances accidental evils should be unheeded by the philosophical mind save in so far as they are remembered as aids to future action. It would be well too that each man should have a firmly based philosophy of life. A carefully-thought-out attitude towrds existence enables one to endure calamity and pursue his daily tasks without introducing a jarring note into the harmony of the society in which he moves.

Loss is common. No man can escape it. He may not have property or friends; he may be a lone hermit existing in his independence, but he has health and life and these may be taken from him. Do what he will, he cannot escape evils. No matter what country he may live in, what station in life he may occupy, steering his bark along the river of existence he is bound to touch on shallows and strike hidden rocks. The man of philosophical mind is the one most likely to get his craft back into safe waters.

Every man should have a philosophy of life. To run a good race it is necessary to know the course and to have a definite goal set up. Life is a race; for a successful career a good start is necessary; a knowledge of the game is essential or other runners will jockey you out of your place: a fixed goal on which the eyes rest stimulates and sustains. A good race cannot be run in haphazard fashion. Unless the path is known the runners are likely to be terrified by the obstacles met with early in the contest and fall by the wayside; unless a goal has been set up the racers may exhaust themselves running in a circle, and at the end of the journey find themselves at the point from which they started. The philosophical mind has perfection as its goal; it studies life itself and becomes familiar with the glory of living.

Christianity came into the world at a time when many minds were struggling to invent systems of philosophy that would serve as bulwarks against the ills of life. The Cyrenaics and Cynics, Plato and Aristotle, the Stoics and Epicureans, Seneca and Epictetus, all offered panacea of human ills. None of them satisfied. The great beauty of Christianity is that it presents the simplest and most satisfying philosophy of life. Love God is the sum and substance of its teaching. To love God is to love the good, to love perfection, to yearn after the ideal. A heart sustained by such philosophy is armed and well prepared for any accidental evil that may attack it.

What are the accidental evils? The commonest is loss of property. The philosophical man smiles at this, he still has friends and health and life. Friends in whom he trusted may prove false in the hour of need. He cannot but feel the sting of ingratitude, but if he has the consciousness that no act of his caused their desertion he can stand alone manfully fighting his battle. Friends and relatives may be removed by death. This is hard to bear, but the philosopher refuses to recognize death; his true friends live on to influence his life, and he continues the work that gave them pleasure with the thought that he is acting as they would have him act. He may lose health; he need not despair. Many a sufferer has, by his patient endurance, been an inspiration to men. Elizabeth Barrett Browning was a confirmed invalid, but she sang songs that will brighten life through all time; Robert Louis Stevenson by his patient, genial smile defied the death that for many years sat by his couch, his buoyant spirit producing stories and poems that were to cheer the heart of many a wayfarer oppressed by the unexpected mishaps of the world.

Accidental evils are common; "man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward." It requires a will braced with a well-founded philosophy of life such as is contained in the teachings of Christ, to be able to say with Job when calamity comes, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE MARK STREET CHURCH

Reports Were Presented and Other Business Transacted at the Congregational Meeting Held Last Night.

AN ENJOYABLE SESSION

The annual meeting of Mark street Methodist church was held last evening in the basement of the church. The Rev. C. H. Coon, pastor, occupied the chair. The meeting was opened in the usual orthodox fashion by the singing of a hymn followed by prayer, after which the report of the Trustee Board was presented by Mr. Taylor.

The report which is too lengthy to reproduce here, showed the financial condition of the church and its incumbrances such as parsonage, etc., to be in a very healthy condition. Rev. C. H. Coon during the course of a short address drew attention to the many improvements which had been made to the church and parsonage during his regime here.

A short programme had also been provided, which was followed by refreshments, which was catered and served by the Ladies' Aid Society and others.

The first number on the programme was a solo by Mrs. Wand, which was greatly appreciated. Next followed a duet by Miss Stark and Miss McKee which carried off high honours and was also encored. Next followed a solo by Miss Tate and a reading by Miss Walker, both of these being well received.

The reading of the reports covering the various branches of the church work was then completed, after which a social hour was spent, during which the aforesaid mentioned refreshments were served.

PITY THE BABIES

All babies whose mothers do not know about Dr. Chase's Ointment are truly to be pitied. They are sure to have skin troubles of one kind or another such as chafing, skin irritation, scald head, milk rash or baby eczema and nothing can bring them comfort so quickly as Dr. Chase's Ointment. It stops itching promptly and heals the skin beautifully.

POST CARD COLUMN

WEIGHING OF COAL.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I notice in your morning contemporary that Alderman Brown is going to propose on Monday evening, at the Council meeting, the abolition of the weighing of coal on the market scales, as he claims that it is an injustice to the market clerk. I would like Alderman Brown to explain at the Council meeting on Monday evening, wherein the conditions are unfair to the clerk. The market clerk bid for the market under the conditions, consequently he allowed for the extra work of weighing coal when making his bid.

Does Alderman Brown think that the citizens of Peterborough are not going to be protected by having their coal properly weighed on the open market? Does he think that the coal dealers are going to be allowed to weigh their own coal? Has the consumer no rights to be considered? What is Alderman Brown thinking about? Does he think he is back on the farm filling bags of potatoes? Does he think that every consumer of coal has a scale to check the dealer? Does he think that the City Council have no duties to perform to the public, in seeing that they are protected?

Is not this arrangement made with the market clerk so that the poor citizens purchasing coal will have some attempt at security, at least, and some faint assurance that they will get the weight they pay for?

The committee advertising the sale of market tolls by tender, provide for the weighing of coal on the market scale.

Alderman Brown will have to show on Monday evening that he has been misrepresented in the statement I read in the "Times" of this morning, or I shall not cast my vote for him at the next election.

It would be more proper for Alderman Brown to propose that if the market clerk is not being properly remunerated that his fee should be increased and the public protected by continuance in the weighing of coal, on the market scales.

Who is Alderman Brown trying to favour?

Yours Sincerely,
CITIZEN

A MONSTROSITY

Mr. Roland Tivey, East City, has a monstrosity in the shape of a monstrous egg, which measures 8¾ inches and 6¾ inches in circumference and weighs 4¾ ounces. It was laid by a Black Minorca—it should be Majorca in this case—hen. Will somebody be able to produce a hen that will lay a bigger egg than Mr. Tivey reasonably boasts of, or at least produce a bigger egg?

MUSIC AND DRAMA

VESTA VICTORIA.

No more enjoyable entertainment has been given in Peterborough for a very long time than was provided by Miss Vesta Victoria, the celebrated English comedienne and singer, and her company of high-class artists at the Grand last night. Miss Victoria sang a group of songs including some of her old favourite numbers, in a manner that left no doubt as to why she has attained the enviable reputation she enjoys. With a most magnetic personality, a sweet, clear voice and the power of getting every ounce of humour out of her songs, her work is altogether charming, and last night's audience could not seem to get enough of her and she was forced to respond to half a dozen encores. A large number of her fellow country men were in the audience and the dainty little singer was given a hearty British welcome that seemed to please her immensely. Her numbers included "The Widow," "Skating," "Now I Have to Call Him Father," "The Artist's Model," and "Don't Sing the Chorus," the latter probably being the most enthusiastically received, the audience joining in the chorus. So prolonged was the applause that followed that Miss Victoria made a neat little speech of thanks, and much to the delight of her audience sang that favourite number "Poor John." The supporting artists were of the calibre that one would expect to find surrounding such a star, and the programme will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present.

Ivanowski, the young Russian pianist, played with a brilliancy that delighted his hearers and he was compelled to give five numbers before the audience would let him retire. His selections included Mendelssohn's Spring Song and Rubenstein's Melody in F.

The Church City Quartette, one of the best balanced and most clever organizations of its kind that has been heard here, delighted the audience with their singing of popular songs. Together and individually, the quartette were very capable and their offering was thoroughly pleasing. The final number, "I mustn't Miss that Ball Game," sung the last time with a "patter" chorus, was perhaps the best.

Van Camp did some clever sleight of hand work, which was made more enjoyable by his funny monologue, and the introduction of an educated pig.

A cleverer eccentric dancer than Johnny Ford has never been seen here and his number brought down the house. His singing of such comic songs as "Smile, Just Simply Smile," and "Casey Jones" was good but it was his dancing that took the audience by storm.

Frank Bush told a budget of stories—a few old, but mostly new—and all good, in an inimitable manner.

The bill was wound up by the Five Musical McLarens, a musical act away above the average. All five showed themselves finished musicians, and one of the company sang "When I Get Back Again to Bonnie Scotland," one of Harry Lauder's hits, in splendid fashion. One of the girls proved a remarkable trap drummer, and the whole act was very pleasing.

The musical director of the entertainment gave the Grand Opera House Orchestra, through its leader, Mr. Howarth, a rare compliment, by stating it was the best he had come across in Canada.

BIG EAGLE

Mr. John Geary of Ennismore, shot a golden-headed eagle on Thursday last, which measured six feet, four inches, from tip to tip. The bird, which is alive, the charge having only taken effect in the wing, was brought into town this morning by Mr. Geary, and sold to Norman Anderson of the Massey-Harris Agency. It is the intention of the present owner to have the bird stuffed and mounted.

CASE DISMISSED

An employee of a local hotel was charged in the Police Court this morning with assaulting one of the bell boys employed at the hotel. Several witnesses were called, and a lot of evidence was taken, but the Magistrate was unable to make a conviction. He thought that the boy could could not have been very badly hurt and that probably there was some justification for the act, so he dismissed the case.

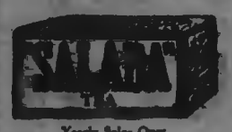
Tea Time Talks

Tea Spoils with Age

No tea is fit to drink after it is two years old. That is the age limit of tea quality and benefit. The best tea is the freshest.

"Salada" Tea owes much of its world-wide reputation to its sale fresh from the plantation. The leaves are fresh picked every week the year 'round; then dried, sorted and packed in air-tight lead packages. Every five weeks a new picking of "Salada" comes fresh from plantation to purchaser.

Bulk teas, carried year after year, lose their freshness.



Ask your grocer for "Salada" Tea or send for a free trial package which makes 25 cups of delicious tea. We will mail it to you without charge. Say whether you use Black, Mixed or Green Tea and the price you pay per pound.

PLANS ARE EXPLAINED

Government Will Go on With the Hudson Bay Railway and the Welland Canal as Well

A GOOD SURPLUS

Ottawa, March 11.—In the statement regarding the railway situation in Canada, made by Hon. George P. Graham yesterday, it was made clear that the western farmers need not hope for Government operation of the Hudson Bay Railway, a supplementary estimate for the construction of which will be brought down later in the session. The Government will construct the road, but the indications are that it will be leased under a similar contract to that of the National Transcontinental.

Mr. Graham estimated that the surplus of the Intercolonial for the current year would be $700,000, which is slightly better than that of last year. In his remarks the Minister made a comparison with the earnings of the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway, and said that by reason of higher freight classification the Ontario Government road was able to show better returns than the Federal proposition.

Mr. Graham stated that when the Hudson Bay road was built, a plan for its operation would be submitted to Parliament. In harmony with the previous utterances of the Minister of Railways, the scheme would involve the construction of elevators and terminal facilities at tide water on Hudson Bay, as well as the establishment of a steamship service to Great Britain. Mr. Graham promised to go into the whole question when the supplementary estimates were brought down.

He reiterated his remarks that the railway would provide a cool route for the shipment of cattle to Great Britain, and thought a Government that would not be willing to make the experiment was not worthy of the confidence of the people.

The estimated cost of the railway, including terminal elevators and harbor facilities on Hudson Bay, would be twenty-five or thirty millions of dollars. With a margin of an additional five or six millions, he thought the money would be well expended.

Mr. Graham in his reference to the increase in the traffic through Canadian canals said that the growth of the traffic was greater than the increase of the railway traffic. Therefore it was essential if Canada was to keep her carrying trade she must be alert in the development of waterways and harbors. He was not in a position, he said, to announce when the enlarging of the Welland Canal would be commenced. It must be enlarged to enable large boats to come through to Lake Ontario without breaking bulk.

E. M. Macdonald (Pictou) took the position that the Intercolonial should be run merely to pay expenses. The $700,000 surplus was, in his opinion, $650,000 too high. He condemned the application of the Lemieux Act to the settlement of wage disputes on the Intercolonial, as it interfered with the responsibility of the Minister. He thought the time had arrived when the resolution passed about two years ago, only allowing the British preference when goods were shipped through Canadian ports, could be made operative, and this would insure control of the traffic.

C. A. Magrath (Medicine Hat) thought that applicants for railway charters should be made to deposit with the Government 5 per cent. of the contemplated expenditure as an evidence of bona fides.

On the general question of railway development in Canada, he said that the cry of the west was "When are we to receive better railway facilities?" The three railways in the west were merely jockeying with each other for position, and in many instances the lines were paralleled within distances of two or three miles.

C.P.R. Acquires Road.

Kincardine, March 11.—The report is practically confirmed that the C.P.R. has acquired the West Shore Railroad and will have a branch from Goderich to Kincardine and on up to Southampton and Wiarton. The news leaked out from a contractor of the former road, who received word on Thursday that he was to look to the C.P.R. for further orders.

Taft Says Reciprocity Agreement Will Pass and Asks South to Help —An Enthusiastic Speech

AT ATLANTA, GA.

Atlanta, Ga., March 11.—In a lengthy address before the Southern Commercial Congress assembled here last night, President Taft spoke hopefully of the future of the south, and paid special attention to the accomplishments of the Congress just closed, dwelling specially on the reciprocity agreement with Canada.

"Of course, the greatest disappointment of the session was the failure of the Senate to follow the lead of the House in ratifying the reciprocity agreement made with Canada," said Mr. Taft.

"When we entered upon the negotiations I asked the Secretary of State and his commissioners to offer free trade in everything, but this Canada could not grant us, because she has a protective system and she was afraid of the competition of our better organized industries.

"The south is practically interested in the fact that vegetables and cottonseed oil are both put on the free list and the removal of rather heavy duties on both, but I do not ask your support on the ground of any local advantage. I ask it because I regard this treaty, if adopted, as the beginning of a new relation with our rapidly growing neighbor on the north and ourselves which will inure greatly to the benefit of both. The conditions under which agriculture and manufacturers are carried on in both countries are substantially the same and the removal of the duties provided for in this agreement or, indeed, the removal of all duties between the two countries would have violated no principle that either a reasonable protectionist or a reasonable tariff reformer upholds.

Canada is at the parting of the ways. If we now reject this opportunity to bring about closer business and trade relations and insist upon the continuance of an artifical wall between the two countries—which differ no more in conditions of labor and production than do Kentucky and Tennessee or Georgia and Alabama—we shall throw away an opportunity for mutual benefit not likely to recur. It will be a course as blind as that which was followed by the colonies under the articles of Confederation, when each colony taxed the imports from every other colony, a disastrous policy, which was the main cause for the adoption of the present constitution and its interstate commerce clause.

"As I have had occasion to say in urging upon Congress the adoption of this agreement, Canada is our good neighbor."

"Against her alone, of all the powerful nations of the world, we have felt under no necessity to establish a navy or fortify our frontiers. For nearly a hundred years, under an agreement that has attracted the admiration of all promoters of international peace, we have had no battleships and no forts between us and her. She is our natural customer; we are natural customers. Geography, and if the natural laws of trade is uninterruped by an utterly unreasonable wall, it would give us a north and south business of large extent and necessarily beneficial to both. Why then should we hesitate?

"Under my promise to use my utmost efforts to secure the ratification of this agreement by Congress, I have felt it my duty, upon the failure of the Senate to act, to call an extra session for the purpose of securing the ratification of the agreement. My opinion is that a majority of both Houses disregarding party lines, will seize a great national opportunity and promptly ratify the agreement before proceeding to other business, if it be deemed wise or necessary to proceed to other business. I feel confident that a test of six months of this agreement will so vindicate the wisdom of adopting it to remove further discussion afterwards. I do not regard it as a matter of sectional interest. It will inure in a large measure to the benefit of this whole country."

Victim of Explosion Dead.

Niagara Falls, Ont., March 11.—George Garvey died yesterday afternoon from shock injuries received in the explosion at the Ontario power plant last Friday, when three men were instantly killed. Before dying Garvey declared the explosion was caused by natural gas leaking from a pipe becoming ignited by a lighted match in the hands of David Henderahot, who was instantly killed.

Split In Two.

Parry Sound, March 11.—An Italian section laborer on the C.N.O.R., named Dominick Rolli, about 45 years of age, was, Thursday evening, working on the track in the rear of a light engine when it started to back up the main line; he did not hear it, was struck, fell lengthwise on the track, and the body was split in two.

There were uproarious scenes in the British Commons during the debate on the land clauses of the budget.

It is reported that the Furness Steamship Co. is behind the inland navigation meaget, now being discussed at Montreal.

The Manitoba Government has determined to retaliate on Ontario regarding the act respecting the licensing of extra provincial companies.

Dr. William Saunders, director of Dominion experimental farms, has tendered his resignation to the Minister of Agriculture. It will take effect at the end of the month.

The old Indian industrial school at St. Boniface for the past four or five years used by the Oblate Order as a juniorate, was totally destroyed by a fire with a loss of about $15,000, partly covered by insurance.

CONTRACTOR DISCHARGED.

Vance Is Exonerated In the Oxford Prosecutions.

Woodstock, March 11.—Jas. Vance, bridge contractor of New Hamburg, who was arrested on two charges of paying ex-Councillor C. E. Sutherland $50 for a bridge contract in Dereham, in connection with the county graft investigation, was discharged at the Police Court yesterday morning.

The crown explained that Vance had paid over the money to Sutherland in order to protect himself from loss and not from any intention of wrong-doing or graft. Vance got the order for the bridge verbally, and after he had the material delivered on the ground Councillor Sutherland refused to sign the order, and Vance said he handed over the money to Sutherland in order that he might be allowed to go and complete the job and not have to send the material back.

Under these circumstances the crown said they would not press the charge against Vance.

Women to Fight Reciprocity.

Montreal, March 11.—Under the name of the women's branch of the anti-reciprocity league, the leading women of Montreal have banded themselves together, and have decided to appeal to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mrs. Henry Joseph is the organizer of the movement, and Mrs. S. W. Ewing is the secretary. They declare that reciprocity means ultimate annexation and, with it, the loose marriage laws and divorce courts of the United States. Reciprocity, they say, is a menace to the home life of this country.

The women are also aiding the men's league in circulating petitions and obtaining signatures.

Concern In England.

London, March 11.—The latest news received here concerning the situation in Mexico and the concentration of American troops and warships appears to be regarded with great seriousness. An indication of the nervousness of the commercial community over the situation is the fact that many insurance policies are being issued by an underwriting corporation against revolution or hostilities in Mexico.

The underwriters gave notice yesterday that after March 25 a clause in their policies would become operative warranting the holders against the capture, seizure or detention, and the consequences thereof arising from riots or warlike operations, of all vessels trading in Mexico, together with their cargoes.

TO CENSOR THE FILMS

Provincial Government Will Examine Picture Show Material—Church Doors Must Open Outwards

CARE OF DEFECTIVES

Toronto, March 11.—Four Government bills were introduced yesterday afternoon, which made a record for a Friday sitting of the Ontario Legislature. Three of the new measures were of general public interest and the third was a revision of an existing statute. One speech was made on the anti-reciprocity resolution, the debate being adjourned until next week, when it will be resumed by W. Proudfoot (Lib.), Centre Huron.

Hon. Col. Matheson introduced a bill for the control of moving picture shows. The new act provides for a central board of three censors, who are to pass upon and either stamp or disapprove all films before they can be legally exhibited. The admission of children under 15 years of age unaccompanied by adults will be prohibited.

A bill was also introduced by the Provincial Treasurer which places the responsibility for egress doors of churches opening outwards upon incumbents, churchwardens, trustees and congregations jointly and severally, who will be made liable for injuries sustained by persons in consequence of the violation of the statute. It will also apply to other persons in charge of other buildings and halls. A penalty of $50 is also to be imposed for a violation of the statute, of which half will go to the informant.

Hon. Dr. Pyne introduced a revision bill with respect to anatomy, and an advanced educational measure in relation to the tuition and medical care of defective children.

The bill provides that the Board of Education or the Board of Public School Trustees of any city may establish and conduct in connection with any school building, or in a separate school building provided for that purpose, special classes for children who are backward or abnormally slow in learning, or who from physical or mental causes require special training and education.

Children shall be admitted to such special classes upon the report of the inspector and the principal of any school at which they are in attendance.

Special grants will be made under regulations to be issued by the Department of Education.

Hon. Dr. Pyne announced that the investigation by F. W. Merchant into the bi-lingual schools had not yet been concluded and that no report whatever had been received from him. A report was expected after the investigation was concluded.

W. H. Hearst, Sault Ste. Marie (Con.), resumed the debate on the anti-reciprocity resolution. He was wonder-struck at the great and sudden admiration now being expressed by Liberal defenders of the agreement because in different conditions entirely he had favored reciprocity. In view of the success of the saw-log policy in building up many thriving settlements of Ontario, it would be injuries to throw open the undeveloped national resources of the province to United States manufacturers. The Soo industries would never have arisen had it not been for the independent trade policy of the Dominion.

Living, Yet Dead.

Toronto, March 11.—On account of the many foolish actions of George H. Annett, former farmer in Lambton County, and for the past two years confined in the Homewood Sanitarium at Guelph, Chancellor Boyd has decided that he must be considered in the lunatic class. Some people might agree with him that all the people of Guelph are dead, but the affidavit stating that he believed himself dead several years ago—drowned twice and otherwise extinct—couldn't go down.

He is 55 years of age and has a 50-acre farm, for which letters of administration have been applied.

Rebel Villages Burned.

Tangiers, March 11.—The French Government troops, led by French and British officers, have again routed the Chezada tribesmen near Mount Selva. Great slaughter was done by the artillery and the rebel villages were burned. The Government forces lost six men killed in the fighting, which continues.

Suffered Greatly From Heart Trouble.

NERVES WERE VERY WEAK.

Mrs. John Farrell, Rose Hill, P.E.I., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

"About five years ago I suffered greatly from heart trouble, and my nerves were very weak. After seeing several doctors and using their medicine, I got no relief until a friend told me of your Heart and Nerve Pills. I took two boxes and they effected a complete cure. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women.

"I have advised many others to try them and they have all been cured of the same trouble."

The proper action of the nerves, so important to the well-being of the heart, depends entirely upon the general condition of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind, it is bound to produce heart derangement.

In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself, and in this is the secret of their success in curing so many cases of heart and nerve trouble.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WOMEN CURED AT HOME

Women's disorders always yield from the very beginning of the treatment to the mild, but effective, action of Orange Lily. Within two or three days after commencing its use the improvement becomes noticeable, and this improvement continues until the patient is completely cured. Orange Lily is an applied or local treatment, and acts directly on the womanly organs, removing the congestion, toning and strengthening the nerves, and restoring perfect circulation, in the diseased parts. In order to convince all suffering women of the value of this remedy, I will send a 25-cent box, enough for ten days' treatment, absolutely FREE to each lady sending me her address. MRS. FRANCES E. What Do You Think of This?

How often we hear men say, "Yes, I'd insure my life if I was only sure I could keep it up. I could pay it alright as long as I had my health, but if sickness or accident laid me low I would have to give it up and lose the protection just at the time I needed it most." Now, the issues a policy just to suit such a case. Under this policy, should the assured become totally and permanently disabled from any cause, the policy is kept in force during such disability, without any lien or charge against it. Or, in lieu of this, the Company will commence forthwith to pay to the assured one twentieth of the policy each year for twenty years. Should the assured die before the twenty annual payments have been paid, the remaining instalments will be paid to such beneficiary as the assured may designate.

Is not this the Climax of Liberality? The Sun Life lives up to its motto of "Prosperous and Progressive." Investigate this proposition before insuring.

NORMAL SCHOOL TEAM BEAT COLLEGIATE 5-4

The Normal and Collegiate Institute hockey teams settled their differences yesterday afternoon at Brock street rink, the Normal school winning the deciding game by 5 goals to 4. It was the third contest of the season between the two school teams, each having won one by the same score of 6 to 2. Last night's battle was just as close as the two previous games would lead one to expect, and was in doubt until the final whistle. It was exciting and rough all through, the paths to the nets being anything but a bed of roses. The ice was soft and covered with water but the pace was fast all the way. Each team scored twice in the first half, and the Collegiate took the lead in the second, but the Normalites came back with two, both scored on nice rushes by Stewart. Once more the Collegiate tied up the game, but Stewart got through again for the winning goal a short time before the game was called. It was any body's game all the way; Stewart for the winners was the star of the game, getting four of the counters.

Referee—Frank Hefferman.

THE CLUB PIANO
Manufactured by Gourlay, Winter & Leeming,
Toronto

The advantage of cumulative buying has never been illustrated more remarkably than in this Piano Club and the circumstances which have led up to it. Briefly they are as follows :—

Messrs. Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, a firm of the highest reputation, with whom we are proud to be associated, found over a year ago that to meet steadily increasing demand for their Pianos, a new factory of enlarged capacity was required.

A new factory was therefore built, which in its equipment is one of the finest Piano Manufacturing Plants on the American Continent. In November last, a larger staff of expert piano workmen having been engaged, work was commenced looking to an output of nearly double the previous capacity. During the usually quiet winter months the factory has been running full time and in some departments overtime, and as a result, the larger output is now a daily fact. Though the makers have a market provided for every piano they can turn out as soon as the spring season opens, the interval of a few weeks between now and then gave us our opportunity.

We Offered a Contract for Fifty Pianos For Immediate Delivery, Receiving in Return Special Purchasing Advantages That Make This Club Offer Possible.

This Piano Club Offers to its Members Advantages and Privileges not Otherwise Obtainable. Read them carefully :—

First :— Members secure a Fine Upright Piano which regularly sells at $375 for $300—actual saving of $75.

Second:—Members pay $10 deposit upon joining the club; the piano is delivered at once, and the balance may be paid in weekly instalments of $1.50 each without interest or extras of any kind.

Third :—We agree to tune the Piano whenever required without charge until the time of payment has elapsed—a saving to club members of what is usually an expense.

Fourth—We have made arrangements to insure every club piano delivered in the county of Peterboro, against loss by fire until it is fully paid for. Should a piano be injured or destroyed by fire during the time of payment, we agree to replace it by a new Piano of similar style and make—Another item of expense and worry saved.

Fifth :—In some cases another plan of payment may be more convenient than that outlined in Clause 2. We have, therefore, prepared four other plans for the option of members, from which it will be seen that the faster you pay the less it will cost. The options are as follows :

Plan B—A deposit of $10 and monthly payments of $6 until paid, without interest. Price $300.

Plan C—A deposit of $25 and monthly payments of $8 until paid, without interest. Price $288.

Plan D—A deposit of $50 and monthly payments of $10 until paid, without interest. Price $280.

Plan E—Payment of cash in full within 30 days—Price $265.

A Word About the Pianos

We want to impress it upon the minds of every resident of Peterboro County that these fifty pianos are from the regular stock of the Gourlay, Winter & Leeming factory. They are not, as is sometimes the case, made for special sale of very ordinary material by some unknown maker. They are manufactured throughout of first class materials by the highest skilled labor, in a factory that in its equipment and standards of work, has no superior anywhere. The manufacturers themselves bear a reputation as a firm of the highest integrity who have never yet made a piano of even doubtful quality, and we do not believe they could be induced to do so.

The pianos are what are known as the Style X McMillan Piano, manufactured by Gourlay, Winter & Leeming. The cases are made in handsomely figured walnut and mahogany, are all double veneered throughout and beautifully finished.

DESCRIPTION—7⅓ octaves; copper-wound overstrung bass; full composite metal frame with maple bushed tuning pins; fine quality spruce sound-board; compound quartered rock-maple tuning pin block; double repeating action, three pedals; third pedal sustaining; dulcephone or muffler stop under key board; ivory keys and ebony sharps; full length music desk; Boston double fall board; continuous hinges on top and fall board; carving on panels hand work, not stucco or machine carving.

DIMENSIONS—Height, 4 feet 8 inches; depth 2 feet 3 inches; width, 5 feet 2 inches; weight (boxed) 850 pounds.

A Double Guarantee

Every piano is fully guaranteed for five years by its makers, Messrs. Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, whose standing in the trade is the very best recommendation.

In addition, we personally guarantee every piano, and, what is still more important, we guarantee permanent satisfaction to every club member. The lasting advertisement of each and every club member's enthusiasm will be our chief interest as long as we do business in Peterborough—and we are here to stay.

The club is limited to fifty members. Fifty pianos are all we can procure at the special figure. We, therefore, need scarcely say that prompt enrolment is advisable.

A BIG INCREASE

Reports filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States for the months of December, make possible a comparison of the earnings and expenses of the railroads for the calendar year 1909. The total operating revenues increased about $220,000,000, while the operating expenses increased about $216,000,000, leaving an increase in net revenue of but $4,200,000. When this amount of net revenue is reduced to a per mile basis, and allowance made for the increased mileage of 1910 over 1909, what appears to be an increase in the net revenue becomes a decrease of about $40 per mile.

Of the increase in expenses over one-half was in conducting transportation in which wages were the largest item. The increase in the net earnings of the first half of the year was almost exactly counterbalanced by a decrease in the second half, during which the advances in wages were fully effective. It is evident that a prolongation of the conditions of the last six months of 1910 throughout the year 1911 will have a very serious effect upon railway revenue.

Reward For Dr. Beattie Nesbitt.

Toronto, March 11.—Doctor William Beattie Nesbitt, ex-member of the Provincial Legislature, ex-registrar for the eastern division of the city of Toronto, unsuccessful candidate for the mayoralty of Toronto and former president of the Farmers Bank, is at last to be sought broadcast over the world. Circulars were issued yesterday afternoon by Chief of Police Grasett offering $200 for information leading to his apprehension upon a charge of forgery and declaring that his extradition would be sought from whatever place he might be found.

The forgery charge is a new one, and is the first one to come under the extradition treaty. The offer of the reward comes from the police commissioners of the city and it is understood that the Attorney-General's Department has authorized the demand for his extradition.

Aged Indian on Trial.

Toronto, March 11.—Ben Asquale appeared in the Sessions yesterday afternoon charged with perjury. Asquale is an aged Indian, living on the Georgian Island Reserve.

The charge arose out of a trial in which the prisoner had sworn that John Port, an Indian, gave a drink of what he believed to be whiskey to Edward Charles, another Indian, and that Constable Maclure also took a flask out of John Port's pocket and put it to John Port's mouth.

Maclure was tried and acquitted.

Evidence was given by different Indians who were present at the sleighride when whiskey was alleged to have been drunk. Two of them swore, however, that no whiskey was drunk in the sleigh or on another occasion, when on a boat on the lake Constable Maclure was charged with giving liquor.

New Grain Act Confiscatory.

Ottawa, March 11.—A number of Minnesota men yesterday morning conferred with members of the Senate in regard to Sir Richard Cartwright's Grain Act. They represent American interests which own a number of elevators in Canada, particularly along the line of the C.N.R. They consider the bill as confiscatory, and object to the clause which provides that no man who buys grain can be interested in a terminal elevator, in Canada or elsewhere.

Mr. Heffelfinger, one of the delegation, said that the reciprocity agreement would increase the price of wheat in Canada. The tendency would be for the wheat to go south, because American inspection laws are not so strict.

Prof. Hambourg's Appointment.

Toronto, March 11.—Prof. Michael Hambourg, Toronto, has been invited to become head of the pianoforte department of the McGill Conservatorium. He has accepted on condition that he will not have to be in Montreal more than two days each week.

It is stated that the McGill board of governors regard the appointment as doing away with the necessity of some graduates of the pianoforte department have felt of going to Europe to finish their musical education.

Communication With the Dead.

New York, March 11.—A London cable says:

Sir Oliver Lodge, addressing the National Free Church Council at Portsmouth, on "Christian Revelation from a Scientific Point of View," declared that miracles were not more impossible than the interference of a human being would seem to a colony of ants or bees.

"I have become convinced," he added, "that occasional communication across the chasm is possible."

PETERBOROUGH'S THREE FOR CORONATION CONTINGENT HAVE BEEN CHOSEN

Col. Sergt. Levelle and Sergts. Soucee and Brightman are the Lucky Men Who Will Go To England.

REPRESENT 57th REGT.

Sergeant Levelle, No. 1 Company.
Col-Sergt. C. Soucee, No. 3 Company.
Sergt. John Brightman, Signalling Corps.

These are the three men who will, unless some unexpected contingency arrives, represent the 57th Regiment upon the Canadian contingent which will go to England to take part in the coronation ceremonies. The three have been decided upon and their names were sent in to the Department at the end of last week. Two other men to remain in waiting to act in case any of the three choices are unable to go, have also been selected but their names will not be made public to-day.

It has not been an easy task to select three men from such a large body of men, and the officers who made the selection have spent a great deal of time in the work. There was keen competition among a number of the men, although the fact that they must have served the last 3 years has eliminated a good many from a chance of being chosen.

A PITCHED BATTLE

Between Strikers and Strike-breakers—Eleven Are Killed.

Examiner Special:

LOUISVILLE, KY., MARCH 13.—In a pitched battle between the strikers and strike breaking firemen on the railroad near Chattanooga, eleven men were killed, including several negroes. The feeling runs high and the militia is expected.

FIREMAN WAS BLOWN TO PIECES

Examiner Special:

BUFFALO, MARCH 13. — Fireman Richard Clinton, of the Engine Company, was blown to pieces and a number of other firemen are missing as the result of an alcohol explosion during a fire at the Wood Producers Company, Fourth and Penn. streets at noon to-day. A general alarm was turned in.

NARROW ESCAPE

Twenty-five Guests Caught in a Hotel Fire.

Special wire to The Examiner:

SUSSEX, N.B., March 13.—Twenty-five guests at the Pugsley Hotel here had a narrow escape when the fire destroyed it. Some of them had to jump into blankets.

DEADLOCK IN LEGISLATURE

Examiner Special:

REGINA, SASK., MARCH 13.—The deadlock in the Legislature over the question of issuing of the voters' list which was broken only by the advent of the Sabbath, was renewed this morning, and it looks as if it may last till Premier Scott, in desperation, announces the dissolution of the Legislature. The House has now been in continuous session, except on Sunday, about seventy-two hours.

CENTRAL SCHOOL IS CLOSED ON ACCOUNT OF FEVER OUTBREAK

Owing to the outbreak of scarlet fever, the medical health officer, Dr. MacPherson, this morning closed the Central school for two days in order to have the school thoroughly fumigated and disinfected. One of the teachers has been stricken with the disease and there have been a couple of other cases, and Dr. MacPherson, in order to be on the safe side and prevent any possibility of contagion, has closed the school until Wednesday. The pupils were dismissed this morning after being inspected, in order to see that there were no cases among them. The school is being fumigated to-day and when it reopens on Wednesday morning, it is thought that all danger of any further spread of the disease will be averted.

"No Quarter" Will Be Given In Mexico

Special to The Examiner.

ELPASO, TEX., MARCH 13.—Both government and insurrecto forces have, it is understood, inaugurated a campaign of no quarter in future. The soldiers on both sides must fight to the death, as the prisoners taken will be immediately shot. A sharp, short ending to the affair is confidently expected. Despite the assertion of Secretary Dickinson, the United States' cavalry are moving up on the border as if to cross.

INSURGENTS ARE STILL FIGHTING IN MEXICO

Special Wire to The Examiner.

EL PASO, TEXAS, MARCH 13. — The fact that Mexico has been declared under martial law made no difference to Madero's insurgents who this morning had another skirmish with the Federal troops near the border line leaving several dead on the field. The battle was within earshot of the United States army encampment. The officers commanding the United States forces wouldnt' be surprised to get orders to advance into Mexico at any hour. They rather expect them.

MORE BARNARDO CHILDREN ARRIVE FROM ENGLAND

TORONTO, MARCH 13.—Barnardo boys and girls to the number of 347, and ranging in age from six to eighteen years, arrived in Toronto yesterday morning on a special G.T.R. train of seven cars.

The party came over on the Allan Liner Sicillian from England, and were brought on at once to Toronto.

The girls will be distributed from the Barnardo Home at Peterborough, and the boys from the Toronto headquarters.

Superintendent A. B. Owen, who is in charge of the work here, said the trainload of boys and girls who arrived yesterday made a happy party, and would in time make good citizens of Canada.

There are now 22,000 Barnardo boys and girls in Canada. There are at present some 8,000 in training in the Dr. Barnardo Homes in England, and will soon be ready to be sent to Canada of other parts of the British Empire.

SACRED CONCERTS IN AID OF THE FAMINE FUND

The Peterborough Quartette, composed of Messrs. Asa Huycke, first tenor, Victor Loftus, second tenor, Wes. Dartnell and R. Pollard, basses, are making preparations for a series of sacred concerts to be held on Sunday nights after the hour of regular church service in the Royal Theatre in aid of the Chinese Fund. The plans have not yet been completed, but the quartette will be assisted by four or five local artists, including possibly an orchestra, and will give a high-class programme of sacred music. Mr. Pappas has kindly offered to give his theatre free of charge for these concerts and any expenses that may incur will be borne by the members of the quartette, who are to be congratulated upon the splendid spirit they have shown in inaugurating this movement. There will be a silver collection taken up which will be entirely devoted to the Chinese Famine Fund, of which Mr. John Crane is treasurer.

THE LABOUR PROBLEM AND A MAN'S RELIGION

To a large congregation of men at Knox church yesterday afternoon, Rev. Geo. A. Woodside gave a forceful address on "The Labour problem and a man's religion."

The speaker considered it a large theme, larger than any man who attempted to deal with it—one in which we we were all more or less interested. By listening to other men's opinions on the subject, we would be more likely to get a correct one ourselves.

Many men regarded labour as outside the question of religion. They thought that religion could not be brought into workshop or office.

It was a large influence in the world to-day, it filled a large place, and had a larger one to fill.

It was man's natural condition to work—God was active when He made man and He said that His image in man was to be actively employed.

The work question could not be studied correctly apart from religion.

If man was going to live and develop he had to get down to hard work and he neglected his opportunities to develop when he did not enlist to serve.

There was no reason whatever why labour did not organize the same as capital and other things. Organization was a factor which men had recognized and appreciated. There was nothing which needed a competent leader more than labour. Labour should never strike—it was a sign of failure on the part of the leader.

What was the power in the world to-day that safeguarded the interests of the labouring man to-day? It was religion. God made provision in His great Theocracy for readjustment of everything He gave to men. The church unlocked the fetters of slavery. The dignity of labour had been preserved by Christ more than by anyone. Man used to think labour a thing degrading, but never since Christ went into His father's workshop had man been able to point at labour with scorn.

The labouring man had moved away from God, but the one who eliminated himself from the church did not understand his problem.

Man found in a church, either a joy or a disappointment according to what he went there for.

NO REASON TO INTERFERE

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, MARCH 13.—Before sailing on a long trip to-day, Secretary of State Dickinson said that he knew of no reason why the United States should interfere in Mexico, except to protect its own frontier. Owing to the large extent of the frontier, a large body of troops had to be sent.

RETAINED THE BALANCE, $167

But no charge will be laid, for the young man meant no harm. His father sent him $200, of which $60 was for tuition in a certain college, and the remainder for board and expenses for the necessary six or eight months. Before enrolling, however, the son looked around, and, hearing of another college requiring but one-half the fees and one-fourth the time, he investigated carefully, and decided on the 30-day Syl-la-bic System of Shorthand at the Moon College, 283-286 Yonge street, Toronto. He started his course on September 3rd, 1910, graduated after 28 days' study, and has already earned over four months' salary. The $167, along with his present earnings, are on deposit in one of the city banks, and the father, of course, is reconciled.

MONDAY, MARCH 13, 1911

A BUGBEAR ARGUMENT.

Mr. Sexsmith, the representative of East Peterborough in Parliament, should see that he really represents the people of this riding of farmers. Speaking at Norwood, he based his opposition to the reciprocity agreement, (designed for the benefit of farmers) largely upon the fact, as he asserted, that the adoption of the reciprocity agreement would mean giving all the countries, with whom Canada had "favoured nation" relations the same privilege of free access in agricultural products to Canada as the United States, and would represent ruinous competition. These countries are Great Britain, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, Japan, Bolivia, Columbia, Venezuela. What, in the name of common sense, is there in this objection of Mr. Sexsmith? Does he think Canada is such a barren, unfruitful country—does he think that the farmers of Canada are such a shiftless un-enterprising lot that they fear competition with countries—most of them thousands of miles away? For instance, the Argentine Republic runs to wheat production. Is there any fear that the Argentine Republic will send into Canada, wheat, to be brought all the stormy way round Cape Horn, to compete with an article of which Canada produces a big surplus? That would be bringing coals to Newcastle with a vengeance. It is just as practicable a scheme as it would be for Canada to ship ice from its Arctic ice-fields to Siberia. The same applies to other commodities of all the other countries mentioned. There is reciprocity with the United States only in farm, dairy, and fishery products, and exchange in this product is only probable and commercially practicable with a near-by market. Mr. Sexsmith's bugbear of injurious competition from these distant countries—many of them food importers—like those in the favoured nation list, is only a shade more absurd than the absurd annexation cry. Mr. Sexsmith must greatly undervalue the intelligence of his farmer constituents if he expects them to swallow such nonsense as the fear of competition from any of the countries mentioned. He had better take some better means to get at the sentiments of the farmers of East Peterborough, than that adopted at the Norwood meeting, where discussion was choked off, and such fallacious arguments as danger from "the favoured nations," advanced.

CANADA'S CROP IN 1911.

(Chicago British American)

The Prairie Provinces of Canada have been enjoying surprisingly mild winter weather of late and their annual "spring opening" is announced to take place several weeks earlier than usual this year. All of the railway lines of the Northwest are preparing to handle the heaviest immigration in their history. Special trains comprising car-loads of settlers' effects are already moving northward, the new-comers hailing from distant European points, the British Isles and the United States. One party made up of nineteen families, the heads of which were well supplied with money, left Duluth this week for Saskatchewan. Reports from Fort Frances, in New Ontario, state that a greater number of American settlers are passing through that section bound for the wheat raising country than ever before.

C. P. R. Land Commissioner Griffin, of Winnipeg, has just announced that within two years no less than 20,000,000 acres of Government land have been taken up by homesteaders. This gives a succinct idea of the actual amount of settlement that has been under way. It impresses one with the fact that the big talk of the enthusiastic Canadian booster is not a repetition of the "hot air" indulged in so frequently by the land sellers of the salubrious South. The truth is that the booster's eulogy is only an echo of the rejoicing of the people "on the spot" who have realized their expectations an hundredfold. Canada is the easiest country on earth to advertise because it "boosts" itself by maximum of production for minimum of expense.

Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta grain-growers look for an enormous yield this year — at least double that of 1910. Optimism prevails on the limitless prairies not only because of the bracing climate, but because increasing fertility of soil with steady influx of population affords a logical basis for estimating on a large scale. The expert agriculturists of the world are now farming the wheat lands north and west of Winnipeg. They went there from all parts of Europe. Great Britain and the United States, and they are employing the most up-to-date methods known to husbandry in making Mother Earth productive. The Northwest was a wonderful producer ten years ago even in the hands of settlers who were inexperienced and ill-equipped. Now[illegible] the scientific farmer, the most glowing crop-bearing prophecies are apt to fall short of the truth.

BREEDERS OF STRIFE.

(London Advertiser.)

Ambassador Bryce on Thursday addressed the New York Legislature, and was received with the cordiality due a great man and a friendly critic of the United States. His work, "The American Commonwealth," interpreted their institutions to the American people as no American writer has done. No living Briton has done more to promote a better understanding between the politically-sundered branches of the race.

While Mr. Bryce was pursuing this good work at Albany, a meeting was being held at Toronto to foment ill-feeling against the United States in the name of patriotism and imperialism. There or four of the speakers called themselves Liberals, but it has never been possible to distinguish between Conservatism and a certain brand of Toronto Liberalism. A spirit of independence within the ranks of a party is an excellent thing, when it is conscientiously exerted to keep the party true to its traditions and principles. In the present case the Liberal leaders have "kept the faith," and some of their former followers have not. The reciprocity agreement is in keeping with the whole course of Liberal policy for half a century. The handful of Liberal deserters have a right to their opinions, but they have no right to affect to have a monopoly of Liberal righteousness, and in the name of Liberalism place the stigma of disloyalty upon the Liberal party. The Government's legislation is truly Liberal, and those who oppose it are not.

The crowd at Massey Hall hissed the mention of the Stars and Stripes. The United States has not always been neighbourly, but it now is giving Canada many evidences of goodwill and sincere admiration. There never was a time when there was less excuse for a demonstration of hostility to the United States in this country. The Massey Hall meeting was an insult to a Government that has extended to Canada the hand of courtesy and friendship. Self-respecting Canadians ought to be thoroughly ashamed of the spirit shown by the Toronto crowd. The men who organized the meeting ought to be as thoroughly ashamed of their work. Nothing could be more detrimental to the true well-being of the Empire than the attempt to sow ill will between the American and British peoples. Selfish interests on both sides of the line are playing on jingoism and prejudice, but the game will not succeed in Canada—which is not Toronto.

SPLENDID DEBATE

Held By the St. James' Brotherhood.

The usual weekly meeting of the St. James' Methodist church Brotherhood Literary and Debating Society was held last Friday with a debate. Subject, "Resolved, that labour does not receive its adequate return." Mr. Anderson, supported by Mr. Turner, opened for the affirmative. Mr. Bloor and Mr. Bedworth for the negative. Mr. Anderson replying for the affirmative. An animated discussion followed by a number of the members. It was resolved that no vote be taken. Rev. Mr. Brown followed with a very interesting review of the debate and threw out some very practical suggestions.

Next Friday is to be an open night with a travel talk at 8 p.m. on Westminster Abbey and Tower of London, illustrated by lantern views. A hearty invitation is extended to everyone to be present. Silver collection.

"TORIES" WHO FAVOUR TARIFF AGREEMENT ARE QUIET

Daniel Quinlan, Treasurer of Simcoe County, is an Exception to the Rule—He Says There Are Lots More Like Him Who Really Welcome Reciprocity—Good for Cattle, Hogs, Sheep, Barley and Apples

(Toronto Star)

BARRIE, MARCH 9.—When it comes to matters touching the inside breast pocket—party affiliations and political prejudices cease to exercise their wonted influence. Business is a force like gravity, and it is unnatural to struggle against it. And it may also be very unwise. The fact that a man has long been a Liberal or a Conservative should not hamper his judgment in the conduct of his business affairs. That it does do so occasionally, cases throughout the Province, as well as in the riding of South Simcoe, in connection with the reciprocity agreement prove. That it be the conviction of one who goes through the Province among the farmers with open ears and an open mind. Ask any one of them to give his honest opinion upon reciprocity of farming products. Then, having satisfied yourself as to his stand on this question of business, enquire as to his political party. The first answer will be the same nine times out of ten. The answer to the second question will vary far more frequently.

A Conservative "Bolder."

Daniel Quinlan is treasurer of the County of Simcoe. He is more than that—he is a farmer in the township of Vespra, where he owns three hundred acres of well-managed land adjoining the town of Barrie. There is some swamp land in this area, some pasture and thirty acres of bush. This land was taken up in 1842 by the grandfather of the present owner, who came from Ireland as a pioneer. The work of clearing the homestead fell chiefly upon Mr. Quinlan's late father, and to-day it ranks highly among the farms of Simcoe. There are five Quinlan brothers living, each on his own farm, and the family thus represents no less than 100 acres.

"Yes," said the treasurer, "I'm a Conservative, but personally am very strongly in favour of the Government's proposed measure of reciprocity in natural products. Why wouldn't I be? I am a farmer. I would like to see it given a trial. Not that I think it will benefit our wheat so much, though Simcoe is a great wheat country, too, ranking second or third in the Province. But it will benefit the whole country over and particularly stock. Oro township is not a wheat township, but it is uniformly fair for barley. Vespra is partly very good for wheat. But I don't think reciprocity will make much difference to Ontario's fall wheat. Our market is in the Old Country.

Cattle, Sheep and Barley.

"It is our cattle, our hogs, our sheep, lambs, and barley I am thinking about. The American market should be a splendid one for us. The United States won't be able to produce enough for themselves in a few years. This treaty will give us two markets instead of one, and our production will increase to double in answer to the demand.

As for our industries, they won't be hurt. Farmers, of course, would like to lower the tariff on manufactured goods further. They recognize high protection is not in their interests. But the present agreement doesn't call for that."

Mr. Quinlan's office overlooks the roofs of the town and the white frozen surface of Kempenfeldt Bay. Perhaps the sight of the ice suggested winter for he spoke next of winter apples.

A Chance for Apples.

"This whole district over as far as the Georgian Bay grows the very finest grades of Northern Spies. Our apples are harder up here than they are down south. They'll hold their own anywhere, so why should we object to the early apples coming in from the States if we are sure of our market for the apples that ripen in our own country a little later?"

Mr. Quinlan shipped 60 head of steers to Toronto last year.

Toronto has developed into a great cattle market of recent years," said he. "This treaty won't hurt it at all either, for we'll ship our cattle to Toronto first anyway. They'll be transhipped from there to American points, if necessary. This agreement will save the Western farmer the long haul. They can take full advantage of the Chicago market for stock. As for the railways, our country out there is developing trade so fast they will have all they can handle anyway.

Lots More Like Him.

"Are there other Conservatives like me? Yes, there are, lots of 'em, but not quite so outspoken, that's all."

William Elliott of Sandy Bay, in the Township of Oro, came there 23 years ago from Galt, and cleared the hardwood on 100 acres.

"The Buffalo market is generally higher than the Toronto market," said he. "It is just as easy to ship to Buffalo. I like to have a choice of markets, so that if one is glutted I can go to the other. After such a glut it takes weeks for the Toronto market to recover. We saw that three weeks ago. Beef prices were almost up to those of Buffalo, when along came 2,000 head of cattle in one day. The buyers took advantage of it and the price of beef dropped 20c a hundred. It has only gone up 5c in the interval by the last papers I got and I get them only one day late."

Ernest Drury is a neighbour of Mr. Elliott's. Mr. Drury is an ex-member of the Dominion Grange. He it was who took part in a public debate with Mr. Russell of the Canada Cycle and Motor Co. at Uxbridge a few weeks ago.

Apples at Chicago.

George A. Caston grows a great deal of fruit at Craighurst.

"I am not at all uneasy about the treaty," said he. "The only fruit affected will be the early canning berries. All my strawberries, raspberries, and blackberries are consumed fresh. As for my apples, Chicago gets a lot of them now in spite of the duty—snows and apples. With the duty removed the big cities will take all the apples we want to send them. Potatoes, too. This is a great country for potatoes. When the American buyers come here now it is only in times of scarcity and prices go up from 35c to $1.00 straight. This year, owing to scarcity the price stands at 75c. Reciprocity will keep it there, even when we have a surplus."

All Favour Agreement.

Mr. J. J. Brown conducts a seed business on Main street, and knows nearly every farmer in the district. "Why, of course, the farmers are all in favour of reciprocity," he replied. "Take the Township of Oro. The land is light, the snow is heavy. Wheat doesn't do well, and the snow is apt to kill it out. But barley makes a fine crop. The farmers are burying seed barley already for up there.

"This reciprocity treaty is a business agreement as I look at it—not a binding treaty. We can terminate it in six months if we want to."

Means More Harmony.

Mr. James Vair supplies more groceries and buys more produce than any other two men in the district.

When this treaty goes through three months afterwards the rank and file will never know it happened. I don't think it will make much actual difference. The value of the treaty to my mind is the bringing of two peoples more in harmony and close touch. The manufacturers are not affected. The benefit is for the farmers. The fruit-growers of this section can ship their apples by Georgian Bay ports to American lake ports, find a good market with no duty, and cheap water freight charges.

"As for the disloyalty cry, I come from a country where they don't breed traitors. I was born in Scotland. If any man said I was a traitor because I wanted to do business with the United States I would feel like striking him. He'd have to take it back or I'd know the reason why."

And Mr. Vair brought his fist down on the counter of his office, and looked as dour as any Scotchman ever looked at the very idea of disloyalty to Great Britain and the Empire.
